461. Thematic Session. Indigenous Colonial Conflicts/Indigenous Identities

Caesars Palace Las Vegas

Session Organizer: Gay W. Seidman, University of Wisconsin-Madison

Presider: Gay W. Seidman, University of Wisconsin-Madison

Panelists: James Ron, Carleton University

Mara Loveman, University of Wisconsin-Madison

Rogers Brubaker, University of California-Los Angeles

Denis O'Hearn, State University of New York-Binghamton

Perhaps one of the most recurrent themes in recent social conflicts has been the upsurge of movements around autonomy and identity, often reflecting indigenous protests against boundaries drawn in the colonial era. The language of ethnic mobilization has become central to politics and debates about multicultural citizenship: activists simultaneously draw on ethnic identities to mobilize constituencies, and assert claims in terms of ethnic and indigenous rights. These conflicts have been central to politics in much of the world over the past few decades, and in recent years, they have been particularly important to post-colonial regions -- where their claims are perhaps especially unsettling to new nations and states. What issues provoke indigenous movements, and what strategies do these movements pursue? What role do transnational activists and diasporic communities play in movement mobilization and choices about framing? How do these movements relate to national governments and cross-border questions, and what does 'multicultural citizenship' really mean in practice? How have states responded to indigenous and ethnically-defined movements, with what outcomes? How have international agencies responded, with what effect?

462. Thematic Session. New Immigrants vs. Blacks

Caesars Palace Las Vegas

Session Organizer: Robert E. Washington, Bryn Mawr College
The Impact of Immigration on the Black American Working

Class. Gerald Jaynes, Yale University

Caste Complexities in a Southern Town: Some Hypotheses on Blacks and New Immigrants. Elijah Anderson, Yale

University; Duke W. Austin, Yale University; Craig

Holloway, Yale University; Vani Kulkarni, Yale University

Blacks, Immigration, and the New Configurations of Racial Identity In American Society. Robert E. Washington, Bryn Mawr College

This session examines the ways in which recent immigration has affected the black American community and the structure of American race relations. It focuses on several interrelated issues - the ways in which the presence of recent immigrants in the South has complicated the caste structure produced by the legacy white supremacy; the economic impact of immigration on the black working class; and the broader effects of upward black mobility and immigration in creating new configurations of racial identity in American society.

463. Thematic Session. New Technologies of Protest and Political Mobilization

Caesars Palace Las Vegas

Session Organizer: David A. Snow, University of California-Irvine

Presider: Francesca Polletta, University of California-Irvine

The 2008 Presidential Election and New Digital Technologies:

Grassroots Empowerment or Elite Control? Victoria L.

Carty, Chapman University

From Twitter to Online Petitioning: Comparing Styles of Online Protest Mobilization. Jennifer Earl, University of California-Santa Barbara

Form, Feeling, and Force in Digital Activism. Guobin Yang, Barnard College

Discussant: Francesca Polletta, University of California-Irvine

Recent political events, such as the Obama campaign and election and the ongoing mobilizations in Iran in protest to the reelection of Mahmoud Ahmadinejad, have focused increasing attention on the role of the Internet and new communication technologies, such as texting and twittering, in protest and political mobilization. This session will explore and discuss that connection, focusing on the extent to which and ways in which recent advances in communication technologies facilitate political mobilization, whether these technologies can generate long-term as well as short-term mobilization, state responses to the use of these communicative advances in challenging the state, and whether these new technologies are giving rise to a new repertoire of contention.

464. Thematic Session. The Future of Academia: Political Conflict

Caesars Palace Las Vegas

Session Organizer: Steven G. Brint, University of California-Riverside

Presider: Steven G. Brint, University of California-Riverside

Panelists: Craig Calhoun, Social Science Research Council

Josipa Roksa, University of Virginia

Edward St. John, University of Michigan

Mitchell L. Stevens, Stanford University

The "Great Recession" of 2008-9 led to sharp drops in endowments at private universities and dramatic cutbacks in state funding of public universities. State disinvestment from public universities accelerated a trend noticeable since the 1980s. As a result of these changes, many private universities have abandoned need-blind admission and become more sensitive to students' ability to pay. Many public universities have enrolled large proportions of out-of-state students, who pay higher tuitions. UC-Berkeley, for example, expects to move from 11 percent out of state students to over 20 percent out of state students in just one year. Class sizes have grown, even as the numbers of students enrolled have decreased on many campuses. Six years has become the norm for graduation, not four, and increasing numbers of students have become discouraged by large classes and the difficulties of registering for the classes they need. Many institutions have frozen or cut faculty salaries, and the long-term contraction of arts and sciences disciplines has accelerated. Although the conflict over scarce resources has led to an overall loss in human capital creation and the weakening of many disciplines and institutions, it has also strengthened the position of some, including students from high-income families, faculty who bring large amounts of grant money, interdisciplinary fields, disciplines closely connected to occupations in high demand, and flagship public universities capable of enrolling large numbers of out-of-state and international students.

465. Special Session. Nonviolent Strategies and Tactics
Caesars Palace Las Vegas

Session Organizer: Lester R. Kurtz, George Mason University
Presenter: Lester R. Kurtz, George Mason University
Panelists: Stephen Zunes, University of San Francisco
Erica Chenoweth, Wesleyan University
Jeff Goodwin, New York University
Sharon Erickson Nepstad, University of New Mexico
Discussant: Lester R. Kurtz, George Mason University

This special session explores the use of nonviolent strategies and tactics for pursuing group and societal interests. The discussion will include the use of nonviolent strategies and tactics by the military and social movements; the relationship between the military and civil society; and effective processes for formulating and evaluating alternatives to organized violence.

466. Regional Spotlight Session (Las Vegas). Working the Strip: Unions, Service Work, and Sex in the 21st Century

Caesars Palace Las Vegas

Session Organizers: Jennifer Keene, University of Nevada-Las Vegas
Christie D. Batson, University of Nevada-Las Vegas
Barbara G. Brents, University of Nevada-Las Vegas
Presiders: Jennifer Keene, University of Nevada-Las Vegas
Christie D. Batson, University of Nevada-Las Vegas

Panelists: Miliann Kang, University of Massachusetts-Amherst
Anastasia H. Prokos, Iowa State University
Rhacel Salazar Parrenas, University of Southern California
Jennifer Keene, University of Nevada-Las Vegas
Christie D. Batson, University of Nevada-Las Vegas

Labor and labor organization has changed dramatically in a globalized economy. In recent decades tourism has become the world's largest employer, migration is changing traditional patterns of employment, and the sex industry is growing and increasingly mainstream. Las Vegas has been severely impacted by the recent recession, with a 15% unemployment rate, the highest foreclosure rates in the country, and a virtual standstill of construction industry that drove growth in the past 20 years. Yet, the Strip is still "working" as one of the largest tourist economies in the world. This panel will use Las Vegas as a foil to examine labor relations and evolving forms of service work in the context of racial, class and gender inequality. In this dynamic tourist economy, local unions have been highly influential, sex work and sexualized labor has remained a major force, and the local labor force composition has been transformed. Panelists will discuss labor force trends in Las Vegas and explore the place of service work, sex work, and labor unions in one of America's favorite desert resort cities.

467. Policy and Research Workshop. Using the Integrated Public Use Microdata Series in Research (IUPUMS)
Caesars Palace Las Vegas

Session Organizer: Katie Genadek, University of Minnesota
Leader: Katie Genadek, University of Minnesota

The Integrated Public Use Microdata Samples (IPUMS) team will host a workshop focusing on how to use the IPUMS database for research. The session will cover the data available, explain how the datasets were created and integrated, demonstrate how they can be obtained free of charge through the web-based extraction system, and give examples of using the data for sociological research.

Presider: Myra Marx Ferree, University of Wisconsin

The UNHCR as Mother: Compassionate Authoritarianism in a Refugee Camp. Elizabeth Holzer, University of Wisconsin-Madison

Securitizing Sex, Bodies, and Borders: Feminist Governance, Strategic Framing, and the Politics of Rights in Thailand's War against Human Trafficking. Edith Celine Marie Kinney, University of California-Berkeley

A Perfect Storm: Drugs, Guns and Dangerous Masculinity on the U.S./Mexican Border. Carol Elizabeth Mueller, Arizona State University-West

Discussant: Mangala Subramaniam, Purdue University

This panel explores the linkages between various types of insecurity related to conflict and violence. Although conventional notions of security have tended to focus on protecting states from external attack, the concept of human security looks at a broader range of insecurities that individuals and communities face in the context of war and civil conflict. The concept of human security is an alternative frame to human rights for considering the variety of crises facing people in conflict situations. While rights frames tend to focus on harms done to individuals after the fact, security frames are argued to have the potential of being more collective and preventive ways of thinking about the implications of violence and conflict. The panel will mix theoretical and practical perspectives on human security, considering this framing both in the abstract and in particular applications.

We Are the Ones We Have Been Waiting For: Experience, Identity, and Community in Post-Racial Discourse. Emily Noelle Ignacio, University of Washington-Tacoma

What's New about New Racial Studies? Howard Winant, University of California-Santa Barbara

Current racial dynamics--and racial conflicts--are the product of the partial and contradictory victories of racial justice movements themselves. The "politicization of the social," in particular, both empowered new voices and generated new forms of reaction and repression. "Living race," and perforce engaging in racial politics in the wake of the racial upheavals of the late 20th century, is the subject of this panel.

493. Thematic Session. Violence in Sports

Caesars Palace Las Vegas

Session Organizer: Eric Dunning, University of Leicester
Panelists: Eric Dunning, University of Leicester

Alan Bairner, Loughborough University
Discussant: Jay Coakley, University of Colorado

The issue of violence in and around sports is best approached from a developmental or historical perspective. More particularly, it is widely believed that sports are currently becoming, world-wide, more and more violent at both the player and the spectator levels. The overwhelming body of available empirical evidence, however, suggests that modern sports grew out of older forms (such as those found in Ancient Greece and Rome and Feudal Europe) that were considerably wilder emotionally and physically more violent. In a word, modern sports seem to have developed as part of what the late Norbert Elias (1897 - 1990) called a 'civilising process'. The core values that emerged in that connection and which remain stressed at an ideological level in sport today emphasise(d) as desirable such traits as 'fair play', 'don't hit an opponent when he or she is down etc'. As this last sentence suggests, modern sports may have started as a male preserve but they are now played by women and girls as well as men and boys, a fact which is suggestive of an equalising trend as part of the wider trend towards greater 'civilisation'. The contrast between the Ancient Greek Olympics and their counterpart today provides further corroboration of this putative body of facts. However, there is a growing body of evidence which suggests that violence in and around sports has been on the increase world-wide since the 1960s as part of a wider 'decivilising process' throughout the West.

496. Policy and Research Workshop. Public Sociology and the Challenges of Studying Controversial Topics

Caesars Palace Las Vegas

Session Organizer: Orit Avishai, Fordham University

Leader: Orit Avishai, Fordham University

Co-Leaders: Lynne Gerber, University of California-Berkeley

Jennifer M. Randles, University of California, Berkeley

Jennifer A. Reich, University of Denver

Public sociology instructs us to leverage our empirical findings and expertise to engage in political activism, promote social justice, shape debates about public policy, and generally engage audiences outside academia. Yet, not all spaces and topics can be easily enlisted to further progressive social change, and some research topics are so controversial that researchers who disseminate their research prematurely jeopardize access to sensitive research sites and subjects. This workshop brings together sociologists who have grappled with the tension between the public sociology mandate and the realities of studying controversial and sensitive topics and groups. Panelists will share practical solutions and suggest workable guidelines for all stages of research and reflect on sociological practice and the public sociology vision more generally.

497. Teaching Workshop. TRAILS: Teaching Resources and Innovations Library for Sociology

Caesars Palace Las Vegas

Session Organizer: Margaret Weigers Vitullo, American Sociological Association

Leader: Margaret Weigers Vitullo, American Sociological Association

TRAILS is the first ever interactive, on-line digital library of peer-reviewed teaching materials for sociology. In addition to providing thousands of teaching resources in over 70 subject areas, it also provides a new way for faculty to demonstrate their teaching excellence for promotion and tenure committees. The first part of the workshop will include a brief history of the ASA's Teaching Resource Center (TRC) and explain how TRAILS fits into and extends the TRC tradition. Next, participants will be introduced to TRAILS and learn how to navigate the site as a user. The third part of the workshop will include a detailed discussion of the criteria that TRAILS area editors use when evaluating new submissions, and provide a step-by-step demonstration of the TRAILS on-line submission system.

Caesars Palace Las Vegas

Session Organizers: Matthew W. Hughey, Mississippi State University

Eduardo Bonilla-Silva, Duke University

Panelists: Howard Winant, University of California-Santa Barbara

Jessie Daniels, Hunter College

Tyrone A. Forman, Emory University

Matthew W. Hughey, Mississippi State University

The crossroads of racial identity, racism, and citizenship are of well documented historical significance and contestation in North America. In our current moment, the intersection of racial membership and national belonging remains no less a central and polemic theme; from the election of the United States' first black (or multi-racial) president, to the discourse that frames select racial groups as either biologically or culturally deficient in their ability to carry out their "proper" roles as citizens. Accordingly, this session hopes to tease out how the concepts of citizenship, racial identity, and racism collide and eddy off one another in diverse registers—from how people make meaning of rising non-white immigration via old and new understandings of Anglo-conformity, melting-pot, and pluralist ideologies; how policy and law is constructed for and against the interests of some racial groups under supposedly "colorblind" auspices; and how the boundaries of racial identity are in flux due to a growing amount of people claiming a multi-racial and multinational heritage and consciousness.

Discussant: Robert L. Nelson, American Bar Foundation

Careers are a lens through which to examine changes in the organizational structure of work that suggest an increase in within-group inequality on the one hand and changes in gender disparities at different points in the occupational hierarchy on the other. To what extent is the economic advancement of women facilitated or inhibited by changes in the earnings and organizational structure of the economy and, conversely, to what extent are changes in the supply side of the market - women's market attachment - shaping broader economic and organizational dynamics? How do these dynamics differ for job paths and careers at the top, middle, and bottom of the economy? The goal of this panel is to bridge the study of gender disparities in careers - including those at the top of the job ladder as well as those lower down - with the in-depth study of organizational and economic change.

The New Surveillance Ages: A Retrospective In 1974 James Rule wrote Private Lives and Public Surveillance, in 1988 Gary T. Marx wrote Undercover: Police Surveillance in America and in 1994 David Lyon wrote The Electronic Eye: The Rise of Surveillance Society. These books helped define the emerging interdisciplinary field of surveillance studies (see for example <http://www.surveillance-and-society.org/ojs/index.php/journal>). In this session the authors will reflect on questions such as: what developments have most surprised you in the subsequent years? if you were to rewrite your book today what major changes would you make? Have the basic issues changed or only the details? When do quantitative changes become qualitative changes? Is differential access to information the new social stratification? Is there need for a distinctly sociological perspective on the issues, if so what differentiates it from the views of so many related social science fields studying the topic? What are the most important social research and policy questions the field faces now? Imagine writing an equivalent book a decade hence, what new issues will likely appear?

Both research and public attention to work-family conflicts have flourished as women's labor force participation rates have increased, men's involvement in daily family tasks have shifted (with changes in family structure and changes in gender roles), and the social contract undergirding even "good jobs" has frayed. The last decade has seen the development of two streams of research that have deliberately portrayed work-family conflicts as a public concern with implications beyond individual well-being or family decision-making. The first stream of research focuses on gender equity and discrimination claims. Sociologists and economists have investigated the "motherhood penalty" as an important source of the gender wage gap, while social psychologists and legal scholars have examined cognitive bias towards mothers in the workplace and related legal claims. Some work documents the limited benefits of employers' family-friendly policies and the often negative effects career consequences for those employees who take advantage of these options. The second stream of research emphasizes the health consequences of work-family conflict for employees, their families, and the broader public. "Non-standard work hours," unpredictable work schedules, and unsupportive supervisors have now been associated with work-family conflict and with health outcomes and behaviors (including psychological distress, cardiovascular risk, sleep disruption, and healthy meals). Although there are important exceptions, the gender research has seemed most relevant to those in the middle-class and above while the health research has increasingly documented the work-family challenges and related health consequences of workers in lower status and low-income jobs. This session will highlight recent empirical work in this area and foster dialogue between scholars who have framed their work-family research as primarily a gender or a health issue.

Local ID Cards for the Undocumented: Much Ado About Nothing? Evidence from California, Connecticut, and New Jersey. Els de Graauw, City University of New York-Baruch College

This session will bring together a variety of research agendas whose focus is on the response of local governments to a growing immigrant (including non-citizen and undocumented) population. While federal governments (in the U.S. and abroad) set the agenda for immigration policy, state and local governments have begun to craft their own immigrant policies, some of which are testing legal limits (Rodriguez et. al. 2007). Emerging research from political sociology has indicated two emerging trends. On the one hand, some local governments are enacting more restrictive policies, such as empowering local law enforcement to carry out federal immigration mandates, restricting landlords from renting to undocumented residents, and deputizing state workers to reports undocumented clients. On the other hand, some cities and counties have opted to stretch the boundaries of membership, and have spurred policies such as expanded healthcare for undocumented residents, non-citizen voting, and municipal IDs. Papers in this session will explore the contested political and bureaucratic processes that local governments undergo to enact these immigrant policies as well as the impacts on immigrant communities. While significant research is emerging in U.S. sites, the panel would welcome examples from international research as well.

Caesars Palace Las Vegas

Session Organizers: Alan G. Hill, Delta College

Vinetta Goodwin Witt, Newberry College

Xiao-Qing Wang, Cottey College

Leader: Alan G. Hill, Delta College

This workshop will discuss strategies of how to successfully manage state sociological associations, how to get more sociologists involved in state sociological conferences, and how to foster good working relationships with regional and national organizations. At the 2010 annual meeting of the National Council of Sociological Associations (NCSSA), there was a consensus that one main focus of state sociological associations should be teaching and involving undergraduate students in research, especially undergraduates from community colleges, which often are a neglected large population of sociology students. Strategies include providing teaching workshops and training of how to use on-line resources for sociologists teaching sociology and involving undergraduates in annual conferences of state sociological associations, by encouraging them to present academic papers and posters. Everyone interested in state sociological associations is welcomed to attend the workshop. Officers of state associations can also share their successful experience of managing state sociological associations and give suggestions and advice on how to make a good use of state sociological associations to serve the purposes of teaching and learning sociology.

525. Policy and Research Workshop. Using Data from the Wisconsin Longitudinal Study

Caesars Palace Las Vegas

Session Organizer: Robert M. Hauser, University of Wisconsin-Madison

Leader: Carol Lynn Roan, University of Wisconsin -- Madison

The Wisconsin Longitudinal Study (WLS) is a long-term study of a random sample of 10,317 men and women who graduated from Wisconsin high schools in 1957. It has been supported by the National Institute on Aging since 1991. The WLS provides an opportunity to study the life course, intergenerational transfers and relationships, family functioning, physical and mental health and well-being, and morbidity and mortality from late adolescence through age 65. WLS data also cover social background, youthful aspirations, schooling, military service, labor market experiences, family characteristics and events, social participation, psychological characteristics, and retirement. Survey data have been collected from the graduates or their parents in 1957, 1964, 1975, 1992, and 2004; from a selected sibling in 1977, 1994, and 2005; from the spouse of the original respondent in 2004; from the spouse of the selected sibling in 2006; and from widow(er)s of the graduates and siblings in 2006-07. Public data are currently available from all collection rounds except the widows. In addition we are currently processing DNA samples from graduates and randomly selected siblings. Almost 85 percent of surviving graduates continue to participate in the WLS. Public data, documentation, and publications are available online at <http://www.ssc.wisc.edu/wlsresearch/>.

University of California-Los Angeles

The session will focus on sources of ethnic conflict, immigration, and the challenges these issues pose to national identity. In the face of rising immigration, multicultural policies that once received broad support in industrialized countries now face the very real possibility of being abandoned with continuing collective violence against newcomers in most industrial nations, some have claimed that the integrity of existing nation-states is being challenged by ongoing conflict. Sociology contributes directly to this debate by analyzing how immigration can produce ethnic social movements aimed at defending national identity. Consider a few recent examples. In 2009-2010, U.S., anti-immigrant legislation and restrictive laws regarding immigrant health care have been introduced in multiple states. Vigilante activity along the Mexican-US border has continued, despite the declining rate of illegal migrants coming across the border. In July 2008, France's highest court denied citizenship to a Moroccan-born woman, because she wore a Burqa. In late 2009, minarets atop Mosques were banned in Switzerland. Fierce anti-immigrant riots erupted in mid-January of 2010, in Calabria. While anti-foreigner violence is certainly not new, the rising number of violent attacks in many settings seems to be increasing. However, we know little about the causal patterns producing these movements. Because the issue of ethnic conflict and national identity is a critical source of conflict worldwide, this session will take an international perspective and identify the major causal factors producing these events.

Discussant: Jack A. Goldstone, George Mason University

While social and behavioral research on terrorism has expanded dramatically in recent years, theoretical perspectives which incorporate terrorism and the collection of valid data on terrorism have lagged behind other research specializations. Especially absent have been empirical evaluations of the dynamic context of terrorist organizations and events, contributing to theoretical gaps in understanding how terrorist groups form, organize, operate, and eventually end. Considerations of both the internal complexity of terrorist organizations and their interconnectivity with other violent groups have important implications in the formation of effective and efficient counterterrorism policy. In this session, we focus on the life-course of, the dynamics within, and the relational patterns between terrorist organizations, as well as the situational context of violent events which contribute to their escalation or inhibition.

548. Special Session. New Evidences of Interaction: Visualizing Everyday Life

Caesars Palace Las Vegas

Session Organizer: Iddo Tavory, The New School for Social Research

The session will center on the new kinds of evidence that technology makes available to sociologists to substantiate claims relating to experience and interaction in everyday life. The session will present methodological developments that complement fieldnote taking and interviews, ways to study moments of interactions and experience are crucial both in the formation and patterning of everyday life and in the construction of more macro-level patterns of sociality. As this includes a vast array of methods and people, the session will focus on the use of photography and video for substantiating and developing theoretical claims regarding interaction and its relation to more macro-level social phenomena.

549. Policy and Research Workshop. NIH Funding Opportunities: OppNet, the Basic Behavioral and Social Science Opportunity Network

Caesars Palace Las Vegas

Session Organizer: William N. Elwood, National Institute of Health

Leader: William N. Elwood, National Institute of Health

Co-Leader: Rosalind Berkowitz King, National Institute of Child Health and Human Development

National Institutes of Health Director Francis Collins, M.D., Ph.D., initiated the Basic Behavioral and Social Science Opportunity Network (OppNet) in November 2009 to expand the agency's funding of basic behavioral and social sciences research. Abbreviated as b-BSSR, this area of scientific inquiry explains the mechanisms and processes within and among individuals and groups that influence health-related behaviors. Results from b-BSSR inform new approaches to ensure adherence, increase adoption of healthier practices, and reduce risky behaviors. By December 2010, OppNet funded $10,434,380 through 60 extramural research projects. This workshop will provide, *NIH-specific definitions and perspectives on b-BSSR, *an overview of OppNet's accomplishments to date, *explanations of available OppNet funding opportunities, and, *answers to workshop participants' questions.
