The facilities of the United States Employment Service for the District of Columbia will be used at the meetings. Interested persons should report to the Placement area, Room F 958, immediately after registering.
The effort is made to take stock of the ways in which sociological ideas and research data have been applied to the current problems of American society. The sessions devoted to this theme are starred in the program outline (see opposite page); the others being the established sessions for special fields. The chairman of the sessions on the Uses of Sociology have been asked to think of their objectives in the broadest terms, interpreting them as best suited to their own fields. I hope that something like a spectrum of utility will develop before us leading from the use of social theory in neighboring fields such as history and economics, at the one end, to the utilization of particular empirical research by agencies wanting to pursue a concrete goal more effectively, at the other end.

The chairman of the sessions dealing with utilities have been asked to review for later publication whatever pertinent contributions they have found, to point out neglected areas and available sociological findings and ideas that have been overlooked. Because there is so little time for each session, omission of pertinent material is bound to occur. It would be most helpful if members of the Association would make suggestions about these omissions to the chairman after each session.

Until 1937, the annual meetings of our Association were organized around a central theme. Since then it was generally held that the diversification of the field made this procedure unworkable. But the rapid expansion of sociology, both in number of sociologists and in the growth of research, makes it a matter of special concern. We do not want to create great expectations which we cannot fulfill, nor do we want to be excluded from the present surge of interest in scientific activities in the country; thus, the theme of this year's meetings should provide a timely common denominator.

Paul F. Lazarsfeld
President, American Sociological Association, 1962

Social Life and Cultural Change
DON MARTINDALE, University of Minnesota

Asserting that "only the individual creates or destroys social forms," Professor Martindale analyzes the role and productivity of the intellectual class in the ancient societies of China, India, Israel, and Greece, and in modern Western civilization. He suggests that these intellectuals not only have key roles within their social systems, but also are the main impetus of cultural change.

1962, 544 pages, $9.00

Modern Social Theories: Selected American Writers
CHARLES P. LOOMIS and ZONA K. LOOMIS, both of Michigan State University

The theories of seven men who have been instrumental in shaping contemporary sociological theory—Becker, Davis, Homans, Merton, Parsons, Sorokin, and Williams—are analyzed in seven penetrating essays. The text, organized to facilitate comparisons between these theories, also includes excerpts from taped conversations with each theorist.

1961, 720 pages, $9.25

Urban Research Methods
JACK P. GIBBS, University of Texas; Foreword by KINGSLEY DAVIS

A collection of stimulating readings introduces students to problems of urban research. Modern research methods utilized specifically in cities are described in Parts I-IV; Parts V-VIII study urbanization at the regional and national level.

1961, 647 pages, $12.00

Contemporary Research in Personality
IRWIN G. SARASON, University of Washington

A significant and wide-ranging selection of recently published research papers that will provide the reader with up-to-date information on the field of personality—the problems being studied, the procedures being used, and the theoretical issues being attacked.
