Appendix S.1. ASA Policies on Reprint Permissions

Reprint Permissions

Teaching and research purposes. The ASA allows reproduction of its material for teaching and research purposes without permission and without fee. This policy allows instructors and educational institutions to photocopy isolated articles for non-profit classroom or library reserve. Although ASA holds the copyright to all material published in its journals, this policy allows uses such as:

- Reproduction for classroom use
- Short-run research reports distributed without fee or at cost
- Use in unpublished dissertations (if the dissertation is published at a later date, permission will be required from ASA at that time)
- Electronic requests in this category must abide by the following conditions: online use is limited to a secure or password protected server for a maximum of one year; digital rights management (DRM) should be utilized to prevent unauthorized reproduction. Posting for longer than one year requires an additional request.

Permission from ASA is not required if the copyright has expired. Material published prior to 1964 is now in the public domain and may be used without permission. Material published on or after January 1, 1964, has a copyright term of 75 years, during which time the ASA must be contacted for permission to reprint.

Organizations compiling coursepacks which will be reproduced and distributed on behalf of instructors or academic institutions should send their request to the Copyright Clearance Center. At this point, organizations requesting permission on behalf of an individual must inform that individual of ASA’s policy on reproduction for teaching and research purposes, and may not state or imply that permission was granted from, or fees were collected by, the ASA.

Short passages of 200 words or less are considered fair use and do not require permission.

NIH Public Access Regulations. In response to the mandatory National Institutes of Health (NIH) Public Access Policy signed into law in late 2007, ASA has modified its copyright policy to allow authors to make their final accepted manuscripts publicly available in institutional repositories 12 months after publication. For more information, click here.

An author of ASA copyrighted material may use her/his own material without permission in any volume of which s/he is sole author or editor.

Online use is limited to a secure or password protected server for a maximum of one year; digital rights management (DRM) should be utilized to prevent unauthorized reproduction. Posting for longer than one year requires an additional request and payment of an additional fee.

City & Community. To request permission to use material from City & Community, contact: journalsrights@wiley.com.

ASA Modifies Copyright to Comply with NIH Public Access Regulations

In response to the mandatory National Institutes of Health (NIH) Public Access Policy signed into law in late 2007, ASA has modified its copyright policy to allow authors to make their final accepted manuscripts publicly available in institutional repositories 12 months after publication.

This policy applies to all manuscripts accepted for publication after April 7, 2008, and is not being applied retroactively to manuscripts accepted prior to that date.

The policy allows authors to post the final accepted manuscript, defined as the version incorporating peer review but prior to copyediting and typesetting, into an institutional repository no earlier than 12 months after the resulting article is published in an ASA journal.

While the modification of the policy was initially precipitated by the law requiring investigators funded by the NIH to submit an electronic version of the final manuscript to the National Library of Medicine’s PubMed Central, ASA decided to extend the policy to authors’ own institutional repositories as well.

The new ASA transfer of copyright form (which all ASA journal article authors are required to sign prior to publication) is available here. Questions regarding the new policy or its appropriate application may be sent to publications@asanet.org.
