Micro-processes of Inequality:
What are they? Why do they matter?

Jane McLeod, Indiana University
Individual
Dyads
Small groups
Communities
Organizations and institutions
Social System
Categorization and the Construction of Difference

Identity and the Maintenance of Boundaries

Status and the Enactment of Deference
Cultural Belief Systems

Categorization processes

Common knowledge

Identity processes

Personal meanings
Social connections

Status processes

Deference rituals
Discrimination
Discredited selves

Doing difference
Contributions of the study of micro-processes

The implicit nature of inequality
The centrality of meaning
The structuring of human agency
The connections across “levels”
The everyday interactions that make inequality possible