138. Thematic Session. Sexual Minority Intimate Relationships and Health
Session Organizer: Corinne Reczek, The Ohio State University
Presider: Corinne Reczek, The Ohio State University
Panelists: Debra Umberson, University of Texas
Ilan H. Meyer, The Williams Institute
Stephen T. Russell, University of Arizona
Discussant: Allen J. LeBlanc, San Francisco State University
The relationship between intimate relationships and health has long been studied in sociology—with a body of research demonstrating that marriage and even cohabitation is associated with enhanced health. However, the relationship between sexual minority intimate relationships and health is in its nascent stages. This thematic session panel will provide a view of the emergent literature on sexual minority intimate ties and health. This panel will provide insight into the challenges and future directions of this research area. The focus of the panelists will be on marriage, cohabitation, and other intimate relationships among sexual minorities (e.g., LGB or T identified intimate ties, same-sex unions) and will cover general health outcomes including physical health, mental well-being, and health behavior. The goal of the session is to encourage and expand efforts and innovations in determining the relationship between sexual minority intimate relationships and health.

139. Thematic Session. Sexual Practices and their Regulations: The Long Historical View
Session Organizer: Estelle Freedman, Stanford University
Presider: Estelle Freedman, Stanford University
Panelists: Leila J. Rupp, University of California
Rachel Jean-Baptiste, University of Chicago
Tom Foster, DePaul University
Discussant: Estelle Freedman, Stanford University
A panel discussion of sexual behaviors and how they have been regulated over the long sweep of history.

140. Thematic Session. Sexuality Movements
Session Organizer: Melanie Heath, McMaster University

Sexuality and Right-Wing Activism: A Historical Perspective. Tina Fetner, McMaster University
Movements Against Sexual Violence: Feminists, Conservatives, and the Shaping of Institutional Interventions. Nancy E. Whittier, Smith College
Regulating Multiple Relationships: Future Directions for Sexuality Movements. Melanie Heath, McMaster University
The social landscape that sexuality movements encounter has changed dramatically in recent decades. Public opinion on lesbian and gay rights, especially same-sex marriage has improved. Exclusionary institutions such as the U.S. military have new inclusive policies. But at the same time, abortion rights are being chipped away by state legislatures, and sexual violence and rape continue to be prevalent in

IVF. This session will address issues such as reluctance to admit the need for medical help to conceive a child, the impact of infertility treatment on men’s and women’s sexuality and sexual relationships, religious views on procreation without sex, and attitudes toward sexuality as the underlying link between views on contraception, abortion, and assisted reproductive technologies. It will also touch on views of sexuality, aging, and menopause through the topic of upper age limits on the use of donor eggs and reproductive technologies.
141. Special Session. Recent Trends in Mass Incarceration
Session Organizer: Becky Pettit, University of Texas
Presider: Becky Pettit, University of Texas
Panelists: Bruce Western, Harvard University
Hedwig Eugenie Lee, University of Washington
Tyler McCormick, University of Washington
Megan Lee Comfort, RTI International
Emily Wang, Yale University

A panel devoted to making sense of new developments in mass incarceration. The American criminal justice system has grown so dramatically over the past 40 years that one in 100 adults now resides behind bars and one in three black men can expect to spend at least a year in prison during his lifetime. This panel highlights research on the broad effects of criminal justice expansion with a focus on how the criminal justice system has infiltrated the lives of people who themselves have not been incarcerated and how such exposure is stratified by race and ethnicity, gender, and social class.

142. Special Session. The Impact of Katrina
Session Organizer: Kai Erikson, Yale University
Presider: Kai Erikson, Yale University
Coming to Terms with Katrina: The SSRC Task Force. Kai Erikson, Yale University
Disaster and Risk: Lessons and Legacies of the Post-Katrina Rebuilding Process. Kevin Fox Gotham, Tulane University
Disparities in Recovery from Hurricane Katrina: The KATRINA@10 Program. Mark J. VanLandingham, Tulane University
Discussant: Kathleen J. Tierney, University of Colorado-Boulder

This session will take place within a few days of the tenth anniversary of the disaster we call “Katrina.” It is widely appreciated by now that Katrina is probably the most telling disaster in modern American experience, not simply because of the number of people it killed or the amount of damage it did but because it revealed so much about ourselves as a people, the workings of our society, and the times we live in. The presentations and the discussion to follow will review findings from research on Katrina conducted thus far, consider what those findings suggest for the sociological study of disaster more generally, and reflect on the methodological implications both of studies that have been underway for some time and projects now under consideration.

143. Author Meets Critics Session. Caring for Our Own: Why There is No Political Demand for New American Social Welfare Rights (Oxford University Press, 2014) by Sandra R. Levitsky
Session Organizer: Brian Steensland, Indiana University-Purdue University-Indianapolis
Author: Sandra R. Levitsky, University of Michigan
Presider: Brian Steensland, Indiana University-Purdue University-Indianapolis
Critics: Andrew J. Perrin, University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill
Francesca Polletta, University of California-Irvine

Session Organizer: Allison Pugh, University of Virginia

Co-Leaders: Amy L. Best, George Mason University
Ana Campos-Holland, Connecticut College
Jessica Karen Taft, University of California-Santa Cruz
Ingrid E. Castro, Massachusetts College of Liberal Arts
Brent Harger, Gettysburg College

The workshop will include short briefings by panelists and then a focused discussion about the primary challenges that scholars conducting research with children/youth increasingly face in dealing with Institutional Review Boards (IRBs) and other institutional gatekeepers. IRBs are sometimes leery of permitting such research on the grounds that children are “vulnerable subjects.” These bodies thus (sometimes unintentionally) impede children’s participation in research, even that which is ethically constructed, and thereby inhibit the contribution of children’s perspectives to knowledge. This discussion is a continuation of a conversation from the 2014 ASA annual meetings. We will also pass around for comment working drafts of three briefing memos prepared in the wake of the 2014 conversation that are intended to guide IRBs, schools and early career researchers. Attendees will then exchange information about their own experiences, common justifications that IRBs have used for their actions, any strategies that have worked and other actions that the scholarly community might take to ameliorate the situation.

145. Teaching Workshop. Why Won’t They Talk? Using Discussion and Active Engagement to Facilitate Student Learning
Session Organizer: Jay R. Howard, Butler University
Leader: Jay R. Howard, Butler University

Faculty often wish to engage students in class discussion, but sometimes our efforts fall flat and we give up the effort. Why should we seek to engage students? What classroom norms sometimes undermine students’ participation? Which students are most likely to participate and to choose not to participate? How can an instructor manage both the dominant talkers and the non-talkers? We will engage each of these questions utilizing a review of the research to identify ways to structure class discussion to engage students and maximize learning. This workshop will help faculty recognize classroom norms related to participation in discussion and how to redefine the classroom in ways that facilitate students’ active engagement and thereby enhance learning.

179. Thematic Session. Counting the LGBT Population in Federal Statistical Systems
Session Organizer: Irma T. Elo, University of Pennsylvania
Presider: Irma T. Elo, University of Pennsylvania
Panelists: Gary Gates, University of California-Los Angeles
Jennifer E. Park, Office of Management and Budget
John H. Thompson, U.S. Census Bureau

Being counted in federal data systems is an important statement of public recognition and acknowledgment of the need for accurate information for all population subgroups. Such data can help document disparities in health, well-being, and the equitable provision of government services. Data can also improve the ability of community service providers working with specific population subgroups to access government services by enabling providers to document service needs. Members of sexual minority groups have been fighting to be counted in federal surveys for the past few decades. Due to recent legislative changes and court rulings, especially those related to marriage, the need for information has increased in importance over the most recent years. This session will present recent advances in efforts by federal statistical agencies to modify their data collection efforts to have the data needed to evaluate the implications of changing public policies regarding the LGBT population.

180. Thematic Session. Feminist Debates about Sexuality: Body Modifications as Capitulation or Empowerment?
Session Organizer: Barbara Jane Risman, University of Illinois-Chicago
Presider: Pepper J. Schwartz, University of Washington
Panelists: Victoria L. Pitts-Taylor, City University of New York-Graduate Center
Abigail T. Brooks, Providence College
Samantha Kwan, University of Houston
Discussant: Pepper J. Schwartz, University of Washington

Feminists are often critical of sexist beauty standards. Some have argued that women’s capitulation to changing their bodies is evidence of continued power of patriarchal norms. Others write about body modifications as empowerment, as aspects of liberating the presentation of the self. There has been a flowering of research on a variety of means of body manipulation from cosmetic surgery, to tattoos, to female body building. This session explores the broader issues of body manipulation, internalized oppression and empowerment.

181. Thematic Session. Sex Work and Regulation
Session Organizer: Rhacel Salazar Parrenas, University of Southern California
Presider: Rhacel Salazar Parrenas, University of Southern California
Panelist: Rhacel Salazar Parrenas, University of Southern California

The Anti-Trafficking Rehabilitation Complex: Redemptive Labor and Carceral Consumption of Global Sex Work. Elena Shih, Brown University

What’s Wrong with NGOs and What’s Right with the Johns? How Sex Workers Got their Johns into the Business of Rescue. Kimberly Kay Hoang, Boston College
Discussant: Kamala Kempadoo, York University
The conflation of “human trafficking” and “prostitution” has resulted in the heightened regulation of sex work with most regulation directed towards the barring of sex work. This stance is illustrated in the U.S. Trafficking in Person’s Report and its call “to end the demand for commercial sexual exploitation” as a solution to trafficking. It is likewise reflected in the passage of anti-prostitution laws as an anti-trafficking measure across a variety of states including Canada and Sweden. This panel examines the regulation of sex work, exploring the option of not an end to regulation but of the development of regulations that lead to the greater control of sex workers over their labor. The panel examines “regulation” by analyzing the feminist principles underlying dominant forms of regulation, interrogating the impacts of various regulations, and presenting empirically-based discussions on pro-worker forms of regulation.

Why Can’t I Be a Professional Jane and Fincher? Social Geographies of Sexuality Education in Diverse Divided Cities. Lance McCready, University of Toronto

Sexuality education is a perennial site of controversy in U.S. politics. Through debates over abstinence-only education, the place of LGBTQ sexuality in instruction, and the rights of LGBTQ students and teachers, communities, advocates, and policy makers articulate their visions of sexual intimacy, well-being, and justice. These visions consistently intersect with stakeholders’ ideas about youth, race, gender, and class. Their arguments invoke and incite both emotional passions and the presumed dispassion of science. Thus, political debates about how we teach and learn about sexuality are affective and discursive contests about much more than education. In these debates, communities narrate possibilities for themselves and others—lives and desires worth pursuing and supporting. This session will bring together four social researchers—senior, midcareer, and rising scholars—whose work interrogates contemporary debates and discourse surrounding sexuality and education. Panelists will address the following questions, among others. • How are science, rights, and emotion deployed in debates over sexuality and education? • What potential do digital storytelling and other new narrative media have to interrupt entrenched understandings of sexuality and education? • How might sociologists intervene in political debates to redirect their focus and tenor?

Migration, Womenomics, and Nationalism: The Challenges for Japan and the Implications for Asia. Nana Oishi, University of Melbourne
Fixing Femininity: Culture and Privilege in Transnational IT. Smitha Radhakrishnan, Wellesley College

The relationship between sending states and their emigrants is being redefined. Contemporary emigrants leave countries at more advanced stages of nation-building and with a strong sense of both national identity and obligation to their home country than in previous eras of migration. Sending states ask emigrants, increasingly constructed a “heroes of the nation,” to take responsibility for the economic development of their homelands. Yet the simultaneous feminization of migration poses particular challenges to sending states and nation-building projects because women are constructed as cultural bearers of the nation, women’s sexuality represents national morality and “ethnic purity,” and how a nation treats its women is used by the international community as an indicator of modernity. The papers in this panel explore this evolving relationship between the nation-building projects of both sending and receiving states and the gendered dynamics of migration and development.

Discussant: Tiffany D. Joseph, State University of New York-Stony Brook

When President Obama and Congress passed the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PPACA) in 2010, it was heralded as an historic victory for increasing access to health insurance coverage for millions of uninsured Americans. However, given that undocumented (and some documented) immigrants were excluded from the policy and select states refused to expand Medicaid and establish health exchanges, many of the nation’s most vulnerable populations will not benefit from the PPACA. This panel will discuss the implications of the PPACA for immigrants and ethno-racial minorities two years into implementation. Specifically, the panel raises key issues about ongoing barriers to care at the national level and examines the challenges of reaching various subgroups in different locales. Overall, this session addresses how the PPACA, as a major social policy, may not improve health insurance coverage or access to care for certain populations, which has implications for social and health disparities.

This session examines urban change and gentrification in Chicago from a variety of angles—public housing redevelopment, the pace of gentrification, race and residential selection, cultural change, and the great crime decline. Panelists will present their research and ideas on the topic and will provoke a discussion on the implications for Chicago and cities more broadly.

Leader: Virginia Teas Gill, Illinois State University
Co-Leader: Ruth Helen Parry, University of Nottingham
Panelists: Douglas W. Maynard, University of Wisconsin

This workshop will focus on innovative ways of teaching ethnomethodology and conversation analysis (EMCA) to novices, both in stand-alone courses and in modules/units within other sociology courses. Two EMCA scholars who are known for the quality of their teaching will share useful teaching exercises and strategies they have developed, as well as effective modes of assessment, helpful readings, and web-based resources. Workshop attendees will be encouraged to reflect upon and share their own teaching strategies as well. Attendees will learn new practices for enhancing the effectiveness of their own teaching and ideas for putting together new EMCA courses and modules. The goals of the workshop are: (1) to articulate and share experiences of those who teach EMCA at the undergraduate and graduate levels, and to provide resources to those who would like to begin doing so; (2) to provide a forum for discussing the challenges of and strategies for introducing EMCA to new audiences; and (3) to introduce specific resources related to course design, modalities of delivery, and assessment strategies in EMCA modules and courses.

11:30 am Meetings
Section on Inequality, Poverty and Mobility Business
Sexual harassment has become a key social problem, affecting both how targeted victims function as well as permeating the environments of those witnessing the harassment. This panel brings together prominent sociologists who will draw on their own empirical research and theoretical insights to address such issues as: How does sexual harassment intersect with racial harassment? What structural and cultural processes enable sexual harassment to occur and continue? In what ways do cultural understandings of body weight affect sexual harassment? As more interpersonal exchanges use electronic communications, how is sexual harassment mediated, intensified, or diffused by the internet? In what ways has the discipline of sociology changed how it has studied and understood sexual harassment and how do we as sociologists need to reconsider our own theoretical formulations, emphases, and empirical focus?

226. Special Session. New Developments in Residential Income Segregation
Session Organizer: Kendra Bischoff, Cornell University
Presider: Kendra Bischoff, Cornell University
Panelists: Kendra Bischoff, Cornell University
Elizabeth Bruch, University of Michigan
Patric T. Sharkey, New York University
Richard Kahlenberg, The Century Foundation
As income inequality in the United States has grown in recent decades, so too has residential sorting by income. The increasing spatial separation of families and households by income has diminished the share of middle-income neighborhoods while creating more communities at the extremes of the income distribution. By extension, children’s environments are becoming more disparate as local institutions such as schools, and local public amenities, such as libraries and recreation facilities, often depend on local resources. This panel lays out the latest evidence on the segregative turn.

Session Organizer: Aldon D. Morris, Northwestern University
Presider: Aldon D. Morris, Northwestern University
Panelists: Cheryl Townsend Gilkes, Colby College
Lawrence D. Bobo, Harvard University

These scholars will focus on the pioneering multi-methods Du Bois employed in his groundbreaking studies and how he articulated the triangulation approach widely used in contemporary empirical work. The panelists will discuss the relevancy of Du Bois’ sociology for contemporary work on race and social inequality especially as it relates to intersectionality, whiteness studies, and the social constructionist perspective.

This panel will reunite some of these scholars in order to engage in a critical dialogue about the past, present, and future of sociological research examining different and contrasting aspects of the sex lives of U.S. Latina and Latino populations.
Session Organizers: Christopher Poulos, University of Illinois-Chicago
William T. Bielby, University of Illinois-Chicago
Presider: William T. Bielby, University of Illinois-Chicago
Presenters: Jess Sharkey, Chicago Teachers Union
Todd Connor, The Bunker Incubator
Pauline Lipman, University of Illinois-Chicago

These are turbulent times for the Chicago Public Schools system, the third-largest in the nation. In 2012 the Chicago Teachers Union went on an eight-day strike over wages, merit pay, job security, teacher assessment, class size, and accountability issues. This was the first strike in twenty-five years and occurred under the new leadership of Karen Lewis. Lewis’ reputation as a fierce critic of Mayor Rahm Emanuel’s education policies led to the formation of a Mayoral exploratory committee in the Fall of 2014, and before falling ill she was widely viewed as having a very good chance of successfully challenging Emanuel in the 2015 mayoral election. The 2015 elections and Lewis’ exploratory committee came on the heels of unprecedented school closures in Chicago. In May 2013, with Mayor Emanuel’s support, the CPS board voted to close 49 elementary schools, mostly in impoverished neighborhoods in Chicago’s South and West Sides, a move fiercely opposed by many parents and community activists. This panel brings together the Vice President of the CTU, a former top executive of CPS, and the leading scholar on educational policy issues in Chicago to discuss the future of public education in Chicago and implications for education nationally.

230. Professional Development Workshop. Thriving at Teaching Focused Institutions

What is it like to thrive in a teaching focused institution? Based on conversations we’ve been having at ASA and regional conferences, over social media, in the hallways, and elsewhere, it seems like teaching is on the forefront of many of our minds. For many, we enter the profession with a range of experiences and respect (or lack thereof) around our teaching from our training in graduate school. But what do you do when you (finally!) land a job that expects you to be dynamic and excellent in the classroom? Would we like to share our experiences as a way to strengthen sociologists’ love of and confidence around teaching at institutions where our teaching agenda might be equal or greater than our research. We will also offer practical advice for preparing to work at a teaching focused institution.

This teaching workshop features five scholars who have a wealth of experience teaching about bodies and embodiment in various academic environments. The presenters will cover topics including theorizing fatness throughout the life course; teaching from a ‘critical obesity’ perspective, using data to challenge assumptions about healthiness and appearance; gender, sexuality, and the body; and gendered bodily privilege. The workshop is intended to give participants practical ideas and tools to apply to their own teaching. Objectives include building networks among scholars who teach about the body and embodiment and providing a forum for discussing pedagogical challenges in and strategies for teaching this subject. The workshop is intended for sociologists with broad interests and experiences in teaching bodies and embodiment. The theme of the 2015 annual meeting is “Sexualities in the Social World”. One of the most central aspects of sexualities is bodies and embodiment. Whether critically exploring how people “do” gender or sexuality in an embodied way or how perceptions of body size, weight, and health impact one’s sense of self or others as sexual beings, bodies are at the core of sexual attitudes, behaviors, and fantasies. Theorizing the body and embodiment is of increasing interest to sociologists both in and out of the classroom. This can be witnessed in the growing literature on critical fat studies and growing course offerings and enrollment in courses that focus on the body as a primary focus of study.

Abortion and Human Rights for Women in Argentina. Barbara Sutton, State University of New York-Albany;
Elizabeth Borland, College of New Jersey
States and societies in Latin America continue to grapple with the region’s recent history of political violence, state terror, and authoritarianism. The imprint of this history is apparent in contemporary social problems and political developments in various Latin American countries. One area in which we can see these linkages between past and present is the field of gender and sexual politics: from initiatives to create accountability for sexual violence perpetrated in the context of armed conflict and state terror, to human rights discourse applied to ongoing abortion and sexuality rights struggles, to activist strategies to stop rampant violence against women. Applying insights from feminist and LGBTQ studies, this panel explores the varied and specific ways in which legacies of political and state violence, including the emergence of human rights and other social movements, have informed present gender and sexual politics in Latin America.

267. Thematic Session. Feminist Debates about Sexuality: "Hooking Up" as Capitulation or Empowerment?
Session Organizer: Barbara Jane Risman, University of Illinois-Chicago
Presider: Rachel Catherine Allison, Mississippi State University
Panelists: Kathleen Bogle, LaSalle University;
Leslie Catherine Bell, Independent Scholar;
Verta A. Taylor, University of California-Santa Barbara Discussant: Rachel Catherine Allison, Mississippi State University
Feminist debates about sexuality in the 20th Century focused on danger versus pleasure, pornography and violence. Those debates continue today, but the “hooking up” culture on today’s college campuses have led to a series on new questions. Is “hooking up” submitting to male desire, empowering female pleasure, or about sexual exploration? Do today’s young women have to engage in casual sex instead of the relationships they would prefer because men have won the war of the sexes? Or do young women now feel empowered to seek sexual pleasure for its own sake, outside of the confines of relationships? What’s the meaning of the sometimes very public same-sex erotic experiences of young women with heterosexual identities? Are they performing for the male gaze or exploring their own sexual boundaries?

268. Thematic Session. HIV/AIDS, Politics, and Social Movements
Session Organizer: Celeste M. Watkins-Hayes, Northwestern University
Presider: Deborah B. Gould, University of California-Santa Cruz
Panelists: Trevor Alexander Hoppe, University of California-Irvine;
Benita Roth, State University of New York-
Binghamton
Shari Lee Dworkin, University of California-San Francisco
Discussant: Deborah B. Gould, University of California-Santa Cruz
Since the first reported cases over 30 years ago, HIV/AIDS continues to be fought in the public imagination in part because of its relationship to weighty and contentious social issues such as sex, sexuality, drugs, class, race, gender, and the persistent inequalities that disparately shape individuals’ exposure to harm. Several groups have mobilized during the epidemic’s history to not only fight the medical condition but also its stigmatized associations that limited funding for research, prevention education, and treatment in the early years. In this session, participants will analyze the evolving study of AIDS politics and discuss some of the latest political and legal issues facing those living with, or at higher risk of contracting, HIV/AIDS infection. Special attention will be paid to the rise and fall of AIDS organizations, cross-national differences in AIDS politics, and the latest developments in the legal sphere, including HIV disclosure laws, that seek to regulate sex.

269. Thematic Session. Social Psychology, Emotions, and Sexuality
Session Organizer: Robin W. Simon, Wake Forest University
Presider: Robin W. Simon, Wake Forest University
Panelists: Shelley J. Correll, Stanford University
Janice McCabe, Dartmouth
Lynn Smith-Lovin, Duke University
Amy C. Wilkins, University of Colorado-Boulder
In recent years, sociologists have increasingly been exploring the social dimensions of sexuality, including how individuals develop, navigate and present their sexual identities in social interaction, the meaning of sexual identities to individuals, the ways in which sexual minorities cope with stigma and discrimination (including emotion management), the emotional well-being of sexual minorities, the emergence of social movements organized around the concerns of sexual minorities as well as the ways in which individuals’ sexual identity intersects with their other social statuses (e.g., gender, age, race, and socioeconomic status). This session draws together reflections from leading social psychologists and emotions scholars on the various ways in which social psychological and emotions theory and research can and do inform the sociological study of sexualities in society and how in turn the sociological study of sexualities can and does inform social psychological and emotions theory and research.

The Underground Market for Guns. Sudhir A. Venkatesh, Columbia University
Discussant: Harel Shapira, University of Texas-Austin
With more guns circulating in private hands than any other industrialized country, guns are a critical feature of American life. The purpose of this session is to bring together some leading scholars to examine various ways that guns shape the American experience, and by extension, the different ways that people experience guns. Each of the presenters examines a different aspect of how guns shape American life -- from their place in familial relations, to how class and race inform gun politics, to the circulation of guns in the underground economy, to the experiences of shooting victims. This broad framing seeks to capture the significant ways that legal and illegal guns as well as legitimate and illegitimate gun use permeates American life and to see a range of sociological approaches to the topic.

Discussant: Peter Stamatov, Yale University
The literature on globalization describes cosmopolitanism as a sociocultural condition, a political orientation, a set of skills and practices, or a philosophical world-view. Individuals, NGOs, nations, and international frameworks acquire “cosmopolitan properties” or embody “cosmopolitan values.” But cosmopolitanism has never been a neutral project, nor do we know much about where and how cosmopolitan sensibilities are acquired. Cultural institutions provide many of the building blocks with which the tensions between nationalism and cosmopolitanism play out. By investigating where and how a cosmopolitan ethos and aspirations, skills and competencies, and political orientations are produced, and identifying the role of material culture in this process, authors on this panel explore the extent to which a variety of cultural institutions create national and global citizens at once.

274. Departmental Management and Leadership Workshop. Getting Your Dean’s Attention: AKD as a Tool for Helping Your Department Thrive and Survive

Session Organizer: Jeffrey Chin, Le Moyne College
Leader: Jeffrey Chin, Le Moyne College

At a time when many departments are under pressure to demonstrate that sociology is an important part of a liberal arts curriculum, Alpha Kappa Delta (AKD), the international honor society for sociology can help. Join us for a workshop that discusses ways that AKD adds value to your department by: - highlighting academic excellence and helping to recruit students to the major - helping with student retention - providing students with a focal point that will enhance their identify as sociology majors - supporting student research initiatives (AKD research symposium grant program, AKD undergraduate/graduate student paper competition) - supporting the professional socialization of students by providing avenues for displaying their best work (AKD student travel grants to regional sociology meetings, AKD mentor/mentee program) - benefits of membership for students (e.g., two-step raise to GS7 pay scale for federal employment) - supporting initiatives by the Association of College Honor Societies (the parent organization of AKD and all other honor societies) to demonstrate the relevance of honor societies on campuses On hand will be representatives from AKD including officers, staff of the executive office, faculty of successful chapters, graduate and undergraduate student members of AKD including current year paper competition winners and others who will give short presentations. There will be ample time set aside for questions and answers and time to consult with workshop leaders.

275. Teaching Workshop. Teaching Students How (Not) to Lie with Statistics: Quantitative Literacy throughout the Curriculum

Session Organizer: Lynette F. Hoelter, University of Michigan
Leader: Lynette F. Hoelter, University of Michigan

Sifting through the many megabytes of data with which we are bombarded each day takes practice. This workshop will focus on teaching students how to evaluate the data with which they come in daily contact (think Joel Best’s books). Examples numbers being misused or misrepresented can be the trigger students need to begin to think critically about the specific arguments being made and the nature of empirical evidence in general. We will present a variety of sources for numbers and exercises that can be used in teaching and examples of their use. Most of the examples will be geared toward “substantive” classes rather than research methods or statistics because those “content courses” provide a gentle entry for students into the world of data (and they tend to reach more students). Because working with numerical evidence is as much or more a mindset as it is a set of mathematical skills, the content should be especially helpful for faculty who might otherwise consider themselves “non-quantitative.” Time will also be left for attendees to share what has worked in their classes and their favorite sources of data or exercises.
