8:30 am Sessions

331. Thematic Session. Hard Times and Inequality in the Suburbs
Session Organizer: Rachel E. Dwyer, The Ohio State University
Presider: Len Albright, Northeastern University Panel: Margaret Weir, University of California-Berkeley
Alexandra K. Murphy, University of Michigan
Jody Agius Vallejo, University of Southern California
Elizabeth Kneebone, Brookings Institution

This panel will consider suburbs as a key site of the causes and consequences of hard times and economic inequality in America. Suburban areas have distinct social, political, and geographic structures that may reinforce inequality and make hard times harder. The growing populations of suburban poor are often located far from social services that continue to define poverty as primarily a central city concern, even as the poor increasingly move out beyond the city limits. Fragmented government and weak regional cohesion cause destructive competition for tax dollars and exclusionary zoning creates zero-sum games which make some suburbs winners and others losers with rebunding consequences for the life chances of their residents. The housing crisis hit middle-class suburban communities particularly hard as families who had long toiled for the prize of home-ownership saw their investments go sour and their wealth dry up. This panel will highlight the reality that like the American population as a whole, hard times and economic inequality are increasingly located in the suburbs.

332. Special Session. Sexuality in Migration: Complicating Economic Migration Theory
Session Organizer: Salvador Vidal-Ortiz, American University
Presider: Nancy A. Naples, University of Connecticut
Panel: Susana Pena, Bowling Green State University
Hector Carrillo, Northwestern University
Gloria Gonzalez-Lopez, University of Texas-Austin
Discussant: Pierrette Hondagneu-Sotelo, University of Southern California

Traditional sociological approaches to the study of migration tend to privilege the economic and material aspects of motivation for migration; more recent research has made gender, and sexuality, important analytic aspects of migration. Subsequent work has looked at them together in complicating migration analysis. Among the aspects shown to be important in migration scholarship that foregrounds sexuality are: the re-composition of the families in the “host” site; the reconfiguration of gender roles and family’s relationship to work, and often times, power within the family; the complications of sexual migration (in a global-sex framework) within a post-2008 recession era; and the newer ways “American” functions given migration in a post-9/11 anti-immigrant US. Sociology is ideally positioned to further the field of migration studies, where class and economic analysis are shaping the study of migration at the same time that migration analyses incorporate gender and sexuality. This panel will: (1) offer a general outline of the processes and recent developments of the mixing of migration studies with gender and sexuality, (2) present recent empirical work that attends to the intersections between migration, gender, and sexuality, and (3) propose a general mapping of where such work could tend attention to.

333. Author Meets Critics Session. Cut Adrift: Families in Insecure Times (University of California Press, 2014) by Marianne Cooper
Session Organizer: Annette Lareau, University of Pennsylvania
Presider: Philip N. Cohen, University of Maryland-College Park
Critics: Amy S. Wharton, Washington State University
       Eva Illouz, Hebrew University
       Dalton Conley, New York University
       Mary Blair-Loy, University of California-San Diego
Author: Marianne Cooper, Stanford University

334. Author Meets Critics Session. On the Run: Fugitive Life in an American City (University of Chicago Press, 2014) by Alice Goffman
Session Organizer: Annette Lareau, University of Pennsylvania
Presider: Waverly Duck, University of Pittsburgh
Critics: Victor M. Rios, University of California-Santa Barbara Glenn Cartman Loury, Brown University
        C.J. Pascoe, University of Oregon
        John Van Maanen, Massachusetts Institute of Technology
Author: Alice Goffman, University of Wisconsin-Madison

335. Regional Spotlight Session. The Phoenix Rises Again But For Whom? Understanding Super-Gentrification in San Francisco
Session Organizer: John A. Stover, University of San Francisco and College of San Mateo Presider: Melinda Milligan, Sonoma State University Panel: Japonica Brown-Saracino, Boston University
        Jason Henderson, San Francisco State University
        Steve Jones, San Francisco Bay Guardian
        Peter Cohen, San Francisco Council of Community Housing Organizations
San Francisco has a long history of renewal, invention, and change as symbolically represented by the phoenix, a mythical bird reborn from the ashes of its own destruction, on the City and County’s official flag. Whether it be the mid 19th century fires, the great 1906 earthquake and fire, the 1950s urban renewal changes and displacement, or the 1970s emergence of the Castro, or the 1990s dot(com) boom, San Francisco’s geographic and cultural landscapes have continually shifted much like the tectonic plates upon which it resides. Twenty-first century San Francisco is undergoing a very different rebirth as fueled by an influx of tech wealth, a luxury-housing boom, dwindling leasable office space, and highly accelerating eviction notices and rental increases for long-time residents. By 2040 regional planners are hoping for 280,000 more residents in an already densely populated, geographically limited city with apartment rental and houses prices equal to—and in some cases already outpacing—New York City. When the San Francisco phoenix rises again, for whom will it be? In this session, sociologists, housing advocates, journalists, and geographers will discuss the nature of San Francisco’s current Super-Gentrification (Lees 2003) trends and its implications both short and long term. What does the current luxury housing boom mean for the future of affordable housing? To what end do rising eviction rates and rental prices mean permanent displacement of long-time San Francisco residents? What challenges does the City face going forward in a city divided among the very wealthy, the creative class, and the working/permanent poor? These and many other questions will be raised, discussed, and debated.

Family Data Set
Session Organizer and Leader: Michael J. Rosenfeld, Stanford University Panel: Katherine Weissshaar, Stanford University Maja Francisca Falcon, Stanford University
        Reuben J. Thomas, City University of New York-City College
        Ariela Schachter, Stanford University
How Couples Meet and Stay Together (HCMST) is a nationally representative longitudinal study funded by the National Science Foundation. The first wave was in 2009, and there have been follow-up waves in 2010, 2011, and 2013. At least one more follow-up is planned. The HCMST offers unique data on how Americans met their romantic partners. The longitudinal aspect of the HCMST follows romantic relationships over time, including non-marital and non-co-resident relationships. Because of the oversample of self-identified gay, lesbian, and bisexual adults, HCMST includes the largest longitudinal panel of same-sex couples in any nationally representative study in the US. HCMST offers both public data and confidential data. The workshop will discuss the design of the study; the structure of the data; the oversample of self-identified gay, lesbian, and bisexual respondents; the availability of specific variables; published findings from the project; and the suitability of the data for different kinds of analyses. Panelists Weissshaar, Falcon, Thomas, and Schachter will each discuss their own ongoing research with the HCMST data. The HCMST data have already been used in major publications, including in the American Sociological Review. (This session is part of this year’s 22nd Annual ASA Research Support Forum.)

Session Organizer and Leader: Barbara R. Walters, City University of New York-Kingsborough Community College
Co-Leader: Melodye Gaye Lehnerer, College of Southern Nevada
Electronic portfolios – eportfolios – provide an anchor teaching and learning tool for students, instructors, programs and institutions. Eportfolios facilitate retention through community building based on shared program learning goals and their communication throughout a program. Students can use eportfolios to synthesize connections among learning experiences within and outside of the formal classroom (including life experiences and academic experiences such as internships and travel abroad), thereby deepening their understanding and communication of sociology. In addition to general information and resources about eportfolios, session leaders will share how eportfolios are used in sociology or social science programs based on their experiences in different types of higher educational institutions. Active learning and participation will be an integral part of the workshop.

Session Organizer: Manuel Valleé, University of Auckland

Carrying out research is often much more chaotic than the textbooks suggest. In this Presidential session, five distinguished ethnographers will discuss how scholars manage to create a theoretical focus out of the massive amounts of data they collect. In addition they will reflect on the challenges of carrying out ethnography later in a career (given the constraints of daily life).

370. Thematic Session. Cities in Hard Times: The End of Persistence of the Segregated Century?
Session Organizer and Presider: Gregory D. Squires, George Washington University Panel: John R. Logan, Brown University Camille Zubrinsky Charles, University of Pennsylvania
Brian James Stults, Florida State University George Lipsitz, University of California-Santa Barbara
“The End of the Segregated Century” was proclaimed in a 2012 Manhattan Institute report under that title, while “The Persistence of Segregation in the Metropolis” was the title of a Russell Sage Foundation sponsored report in that same year. By most measures levels of black-white segregation have declined since 1970. But Hispanic-white and Asian-white measures have remained about the same or increased slightly. And in 2010 the typical African American lived in a neighborhood that was 35% white, a figure that is basically unchanged since 1940. It has long been an article of faith that segregation is a central feature of the ecology of the nation’s cities and suburbs, and that such uneven development fuels a wide range of social costs for all communities but particularly for those of color. That faith is being challenged. All observers agree that the world has changed since the Kerner Commission warned in 1968 of the creation of largely poor and black inner cities surrounded by prosperous and white suburbs. The melting pot has not been created while the urban and metropolitan mosaic has become more complex. But in recent years debate has heated considerably over just how much has been achieved. How far have we come in desegregating our nation’s metropolitan regions and in nurturing integration? How, if at all, have the costs of segregation been ameliorated? What are the primary policy issues that elected officials and enforcement agencies should address? What role has research played in these debates and what role can it play in the future? These are the questions that will be addressed in this session. Longstanding leading scholars of race, housing, and metropolitan development will engage in a discussion of where we have been and where we are going. Each will make a brief presentation (5-10 minutes) followed by short answers to questions posed by the moderator. Panelists will be encouraged to respond to each other and engage in a discussion rather than simply present and then answer questions. At least half the time will then be devoted to questions from, and conversations with, the audience.

371. Thematic Session. Hard Times and Families in the Past: Lessons from the Eurasia Project Session Organizer and Presider: Cameron Campbell, Hong Kong University of Science and Technology Panel: Cameron Campbell, Hong Kong University of Science and Technology
James Lee, Hong Kong University of Science and Technology
Jason Beckfield, Harvard University
Daniel Little, University of Michigan
Andreas Wimmer, Princeton University
Satomi Kurosu, Reitaku University

This session assesses the implications of the Eurasia Project in Family and Population (EAP) for our understanding of family organization and demographic behavior in past times, and for the conduct of historical and comparative research. For twenty years, EAP participants have engaged in a large-scale, comparative, quantitative investigation of family, community, household responses to hard times in the past via analysis of patterns of demographic responses to economic and other stress in longitudinal, individual-level historical data. Results have provided insight into family responses to hard times in Europe and Asia as revealed by differences in patterns of individual responses according to community, household, and family context. It has produced two volumes on mortality and fertility published by MIT Press. A third volume, on marriage, is forthcoming from MIT Press in 2014. After a brief introduction to the project, four distinguished panelists will assess its implications for historical and comparative sociology, demography, and family sociology.

372. Thematic Session. Researching Obama: Race, Health Care, Democracy, Culture
Session Organizer: Adia M. Harvey Wingfield, Georgia State University
Presider: Nadia Y. Kim, Loyola Marymount University Panel: Jeffrey C. Alexander, Yale University
Enid Logan, University of Minnesota
Michael Tesler, Brown University

Since his successful run for the Presidency in 2008 and subsequent reelection in 2012, Barack Obama’s meteoric rise to the nation’s highest office has been marked by successes, failures, and near-constant discussion and analysis. Importantly, his campaigns, administration, and presidency have also given rise to a wide breadth of sociological research examining the consequences, implications, and significance of his status as the first black president. The challenges he has faced and the policy decisions he has advocated in his role has excited much attention. This exciting panel brings together some of the top names in sociology to discuss the various research and scholarly studies on different aspects of Obama’s presidency. Tackling topics as diverse as health-care reform, democratic processes, racial politics, and the role of gender, this panel will present their important empirical and theoretical studies of this historic administration.

373. Special Session. Hard Times for Eurasian Countries: The Impact of Economic Inequality on Families and Individuals
Session Organizers: Richard Lachmann, State University of New York-Albany and Andrey V. Rezaev, St. Petersburg State University and International Center for Comparative and Institutional Research
Panel: Andrey V. Rezaev, St. Petersburg State University and International Center for Comparative and Institutional Research
John Witte, University of Wisconsin-Madison
Gregory Sandstron, European Humanities University
D.M. Zhikharevich, St. Petersburg State University-

Russia
Discussant: Richard Lachmann, State University of New York-Albany

There has been much recent discussion on the worldwide wave of neoliberalism and how to explain variations across countries in governmental policies and the levels (and degree of change) in inequality. Most of that research has focused on the U.S. and other wealthy countries. The goal of this panel is to extend the discussion to the former socialist countries of Eurasia. Their socialists pasts provide a degree of commonality, while their very different paths away from state socialism account for variation and need explanation and analysis. This panel will focus on one aspect of this broad topic, the role of states and of popular mobilization in affecting the levels of inequality.

375. Professional Development Workshop. Informational Session: William T. Grant Scholars Program
Session Organizer: Mary E. Pattillo, Northwestern University
Leader: Vivian Tseng, William T. Grant Foundation
Co-Leaders: Mary E. Pattillo, Northwestern University
Adam Gamoran, University of Wisconsin-Madison
Dina G. Okamoto, Indiana University

This Professional Development Session will introduce the focus areas of the William T. Grant Scholars Program and provide information and answer questions about putting together a strong application. The WT Grant Foundation has as its mission to support research to improve the lives of young people. The Scholars Program supports promising early-career researchers from diverse disciplines, who have demonstrated success in conducting high-quality research and are seeking to further develop and broaden their expertise. Candidates are nominated by a supporting institution and must submit five-year research plans that demonstrate creativity, intellectual rigor, and a commitment to continued professional development. Every year, four to six William T. Grant Scholars are selected and each receives $350,000 distributed over a five-year period. 377. Policy and Research Workshop. A Model for Bringing Research into the Policy Process
Session Organizer and Leader: Roberta M. Splatter-Roth, American Sociological Association
Co-Leaders: Patricia E. White, National Science Foundation and Kelly A. Joyce, Drexel University

The purpose of this workshop is to discuss a new National Science Foundation project for understanding social science research is brought into the policy process does not assume an “idealized,” but simplistic, causal model that takes for granted that policymakers will read research in scholarly journals and adopt their methods and findings to craft new policy. Rather than assuming a linear model that starts with the research and ends with new public policy, this project proposes a relational model, including relations, networks, events, strategies, and processes. It also attempts to broaden the concept of “use” of research in the policy process beyond Congressional legislation. To develop and test this model, we hope to hear examples from workshop participants about their experiences. We will also discuss how to format research so that it is easy to use by policy makers. By refining, elaborating, and testing this model academics can learn the approaches that are successful for bringing research into the policy process. A theoretically, experientially, and empirically-based understanding of the relationship between research and the policy process should result in a richer, more strategic understanding of the full array of linkages that can increase the likelihood that social science research will be used in the broadest sense and at a variety of policy-making locations. (This session is part of this year’s 22nd Annual ASA Research Support Forum.)

Multigenerational Relationships in Families with Custodial Grandparents. Rachel Dunifon, Cornell University; Kimberly Kopko, Cornell University; P. Lindsay Chase-Lansdale and Laurie Wakschlag, Northwestern University

This thematic session focuses on how grandparents pitch in during hard times. The session focuses on how grandparents assist with childcare, finances, emotional needs, and custodial care. The papers analyze quantitative sources of data, including the HRS, the National Social Life, Health and Aging Project, and the US Census Bureau, and qualitative sources, such as a study of custodial grandparents and a study of non-custodial grandmothers. Together, the authors emphasize how the national picture changes over time with economic up and down turns, and how the personal picture changes when individual grandparents pitch in. What kinds of support do grandparents provide and what are the impacts on grandchildren, adult children, and the grandparents themselves? The papers pay careful attention to how the situation varies by marital status, economic status, education, race and other key stratifying variables. They show how and why grandparents pitch in during hard times and the consequences of their efforts.

415. Regional Spotlight Session. Teaching about Race in a “Diverse” Place

Session Organizers: Carlos E. Garcia, San Jose State University and Cynthia Ganote, St. Mary's College-California
Panel: Christina Nichole Baker, Sonoma State University
Cynthia Ganote, St. Mary's College-California
Susan B. Murray, San Jose State University
In seemingly liberal or progressive spaces, certain unique challenges emerge when teaching about race and ethnicity. Particularly, racism is perceived to occur elsewhere or is seen as a thing of the past so faculty face the challenge of teaching on issues no longer considered relevant. The Bay Area, despite its long history of immigration and progressive politics, is not immune to incidents of racism or hate crimes. The classroom is one of the arenas where this dissonance is played out. This panel will examine not only how the topic is approached in the classroom, it will also look at how students, faculty, and staff perceive the topic of diversity in campus settings.

417. Professional Development Workshop. Taking Your Writing and Editing Skills to the Next Level: A Hands-On Workshop with Writing Mentors including ASA Editors
Session Organizer and Leader: James M. Jasper, City University of New York-Graduate Center
Co-Leaders: Lee Clarke, State University of New Jersey-Rutgers
Jodi O'Brien, Seattle University
Arlene J. Stein, State University of New Jersey-Rutgers
Robin Leidner, University of Pennsylvania
Attendees should bring ten copies of a two-page writing sample so that we can practice editing on their work.

Session Organizer and Leader: Patricia E. White, National Science Foundation
Co-Leaders: Christopher A. Ball, University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill
R. Saylor Breckenridge, National Science Foundation
Joseph Galaskiewicz, University of Arizona
Michael W. Macy, Cornell University
The Sociology Program at the National Science Foundation (NSF) supports large-scale data infrastructure projects and basic research projects to construct and analyze "big data," and develop new methods by which it can be studied. This session focuses on the research context, trade-offs, limitations, and promises of "big data" for basic social science research. Representatives from the NSF Sociology Program, its proposal review panels, and Principle Investigators (PIs) on NSF-funded big data projects will describe the accessibility, availability, sampling and operationalization techniques, potential for theory development, and examples of major research findings. The session is interactive; audience participation is encouraged. (This session is part of this year's 22nd Annual ASA Research Support Forum.)

419. Teaching Workshop. Using Wikipedia as a Teaching Tool in Sociology Classes
Session Organizer and Leader: LiAnna Davis, Wiki Education Foundation
Co-Leaders: Anne Kingsley, Diablo Valley Community College
Jami Mathewson, Wiki Education Foundation
The Wikipedia Education Program encourages university students to contribute content to Wikipedia in place of a traditional research paper or as the literature review section of a longer analytical paper. Since 2012, ASA's Wikipedia Initiative has encouraged sociology professors to participate in the Wikipedia Education Program. In this workshop, staff from the Wiki Education Foundation will showcase the results from 30+ sociology courses who have participated in the Wikipedia Education Program, and professors who have taught sociology classes through the program will explain their experiences. Using Wikipedia as a teaching tool is having a huge impact on the scholarship of teaching and learning at the university level. Students gain skills in expository writing, research, collaboration, wiki technology, source evaluation, and critical thinking, as well as developing a community of practice through the Wikipedia assignment. Through our interactive presentation and fun activities, we will walk attendees through how they can use Wikipedia as a teaching tool in higher education classes in sociology.

450. Section on Sociology of Population Paper Session. Immigrant Integration and Inequality US higher education is undergoing profound change. How Americans fund govern, assess, and experience college all are in flux, creating a sense of crisis for many in the academy but also great experimentation in business models, instructional delivery, and educational research. Some go so far as to promise that the best higher education is yet to come. This panel assembles seasoned scholars, education innovators, and institutional leaders to discuss the fate and future of US higher education today.

453. Thematic Session. Hard Times in the Public Sector: Rethinking Inequality, State and Neoliberal Reforms
Session Organizer: Vincent J. Roscigno, The Ohio State University
Presider: George Wilson, University of Miami
Panel: Cheol-Sung Lee, University of Chicago
William Darby, Duke University
Fred Block, University of California-Davis
Sociology has long treated the public sector as a somehow distinct domain relative to the private sector, affording, for instance, workplace protections and benefits that help to mitigate inequalities associated with race/ethnicity, gender and class. Neo-liberal reforms and transformations of the state sector, both in the US and globally, however, have fundamentally reshaped the inequality equation in ways that our field generally, and its sub areas of social stratification, political sociology, collective behavior and social movements, work, and organizations, have yet to adequately grasp. This panel brings together five prominent sociologists who will draw on their own empirical and theoretical insights in providing guideposts relative to questions such as: What structural and cultural processes have been involved with moves toward privatization and how have the public sector, states and institutions been transformed? What have been the inequality consequences, at least thus far, and what seem to be the dominant trends? And, no less important, in what ways do we as sociologists need to reconsider our own theoretical formulations, emphases and empirical foci?

454. Thematic Session. Religion and Hard Times
Session Organizers and Presiders: Nancy J. Davis, DePauw University and Robert V. Robinson, Indiana University
Poor Mothers, Religion, and the American Dream. Susan Crawford Sullivan, College of the Holy Cross
In economic recession, does religion motivate support for greater public and private assistance to the poor and higher taxes on the wealthy or does it bolster the belief that unbridled capitalism will lift people out of poverty? Some Evangelical organizations, such as Sojourners, support greater government aid to the poor, while the Tea Party, often with the support of religious traditionalists, seeks reductions in social spending. Polls during the recession indicate that the religiously orthodox are more likely than modernists to still believe in the American Dream, while other research finds that the orthodox are more supportive than modernists of state aid to the poor. Because women have been hardest hit by the recession, we must take into account the perspective of poor women on religion as this affects their beliefs on receiving government assistance and the American Dream. These paradoxes and their implications for the post-recession period will be discussed.

455. Special Session. Inequality in International Comparison: Powerful Approaches
Session Organizer and Presider: Fabian T. Pfeffer, University of Michigan
Panel: David Brady, WZB Berlin Social Research Center
  Florencia Torche, New York University
  Yu Xie, University of Michigan
Discussant: Guillermina Jasso, New York University
  The fact that the United States are marked by exceptionally high and rising levels of social inequality is well established. To understand the institutional factors behind the sources and consequences of this inequality, sociological research is increasingly turning its attention to other nations that have kept inequality at lower levels, slowed its growth despite similar external pressures, or mitigated its detrimental effects on families and children. The degree to which such cross-national comparisons may be able to shed light on the mechanisms that produce and flow from unequal resource distributions with a particular eye towards the distinct opportunities provided by nationally representative panel studies (both long-running panel surveys, such as the U.S. Panel Study of Income Dynamics and the German Socio-Economic Panel (SOEP), as well as newer studies from Latin America and China).

456. Author Meets Critics Session. The Rise of Women: The Growing Gender Gap in Education and What It Means for American Schools (Russell Sage Foundation, 2013) by Thomas A. Diprete and Claudia Buchman
Session Organizer: Brian Powell, Indiana University
Presider: Janice McCabe, Dartmouth College
Critics: Roslyn A. Mickelson, University of North Carolina-Charlotte
  Dana M. Britton, State University of New Jersey-Rutgers

457. Professional Development Workshop. Using Social Media as a Professional Development Tool Session Organizer and Presider: Neal Caren, University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill Panel: Lisa Wade, Occidental College
  Brayden G. King, Northwestern University
  Eric Anthony Grolman, University of Richmond
  Nathan Scott Palmer, Georgia Southern University
  Tina Feltner, MScMaster University Imagine going out to a bar with an eclectic group of bloggers. They gossip, provide tips, share secrets, and answer some of your questions. This session will be like that, but without the drinks.
458. Policy and Research Workshop. Qualitative Research: Review Standards and Funding Opportunities at the National Science Foundation Session Organizer ad Leader: Patricia E. White, National Science Foundation
Co-Leaders: Linda Marie Burton, Duke University
  Prudence L. Carter, Stanford University
  Joane Nagel, University of Kansas
  Celeste M. Watkins-Hayes, Northwestern University
  The National Science Foundation (NSF) supports sociological research that uses the full range of social science methodological approaches. Yet, an ongoing and persistent myth is that the NSF does not fund research that uses qualitative techniques. Presenters will share their experiences as peer reviewers and successful competitors for NSF funding, highlighting effective grantsmanship for the conduct of qualitative research. They will discuss how to prepare competitive qualitative research proposals; the NSF peer review system and the review process; and the criteria for evaluation of proposals submitted to NSF and interpret what this means for qualitative research. Workshop participants will share their experience in developing, reviewing and securing funding for projects that are reflective of the various qualitative

488. Plenary Session. An Evening with Malcolm Gladwell
Session Organizer: Annette Lareau, University of Pennsylvania
Keynote Address: Malcolm Gladwell, The New Yorker
Malcolm Gladwell is the author of five New York Times bestsellers — The Tipping Point, Blink, Outliers, What the Dog Saw, and now, his latest, David and Goliath: Underdogs, Misfits and the Art of Battling Giants. He has been named one of the 100 most influential people by TIME magazine and one of the Foreign Policy’s Top Global Thinkers. He has explored how ideas spread in the Tipping Point, decision making in Blink, and the roots of success in Outliers. With his latest book, David and Goliath, he examines our understanding of the advantages of disadvantages, arguing that we have underestimated the value of adversity and over-estimated the value of privilege. He has been a staff writer for The New Yorker since 1996. He has won a national magazine award and been honored by the American
