The President at Mid-Year

Russell R. Dynes Named ASA Executive Officer

Russell R. Dynes, the new executive officer of the American Sociological Association (ASA), has been appointed to the position by the ASA Board of Directors. Dynes will assume his new role on January 1, 2002, following the retirement of the current executive officer, John F. Keman. Dynes will serve a three-year term as executive officer, with the possibility of renewal for an additional three years.

Dynes has been a member of the ASA since 1975 and has held various positions within the association. He has served as chair of the ASA's Section on Social Problems and as a member of the ASA's Council. Dynes has also been a member of the American Sociological Review and the Journal of Health and Social Behavior.

Dynes is a professor of sociology at the University of California, Los Angeles, where he has taught for over 25 years. He has conducted extensive research on social inequality, public policy, and social welfare, and has published numerous articles and books on these topics.

Dynes has been active in the ASA's policy-making process, serving as a member of the ASA's Board of Directors and as a member of the ASA's Committee on the Status of Women in Sociology. He has also served as a member of the ASA's Committee on Professional Ethics and as a member of the ASA's Committee on the Status of Minorities in Sociology.

Dynes is a Past President of the American Sociological Association and has served as the ASA's President-Elect. He has also served as the ASA's Vice President and as the ASA's Secretary-Treasurer.

Dynes is a member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences and has been a fellow of the American Academy of Political and Social Science.

Dynes is a recipient of the ASA's Distinguished Contribution to Sociology Award and the ASA's Distinguished Service Award.

The concept of networks — interactions of people, places, and organizations — is becoming visible in many important fields, particularly in the human services. This new book describes the deliberate formation and development of a network of individuals (referred to as the Essex network) that grew and was successful beyond expectations. The network ultimately involves hundreds of people in several states and enabling network members to mount programs that would otherwise have been impossible. People from schools, colleges and universities, and public and private agencies joined together for two major purposes: to develop resource bases on a barter-economy basis for their mutual benefit and to form a psychological sense of community, the need for which is one of the main problems of contemporary life. Although the authors provide examples of how a network operates, they focus primarily on the rationale behind the Essex network, those who started it, the problems encountered, the importance of such activities as network meetings, and the significance of the network in the lives of its members. In describing the effectiveness of the individual whose drive and knowledge put a distinctive stamp on this particular network, many fascinating questions about leadership are raised.

As a truly innovative contribution to the theory and practice of resource networks, this book has important implications for public policy and programming. The Essex network demonstrates that there are ways of dealing with limited human and natural resources and with the need for people to have a feeling of community. Its implications will be particularly interesting to those who see money as the primary way to acquire needed resources — a current view that pits agency against agency in a competitive, self-defeating struggle. A distinctive feature of the book is a full review of the burgeoning literature on network development. The Essex network demonstrates how to overcome some of the limitations of networks and become a central concept in fields such as sociology, psychology, psychiatry, and geography.

TOWARD MATURITY

The Social Processing of Human Development

This unique book presents a radically new approach to human development. In conventional practice, social and behavioral scientists take the development of life for granted. They view it as a stage-like unfolding process with a beginning, middle, and end — childhood, middle age, and old age. Jaber F. Gubrium and David R. Buckhold do not assume that the life cycle moves automatically in some progressive fashion. They maintain that the advance of life is closely related to the ideas that are held about it, to how people use ideas about age and behavior in relation to themselves and others. They provide examples of how people, in dealing with each other in everyday life, discuss the concept of maturity, regression, and so on. Thus the meaning of age is presented and negotiated from moment to moment as people participate in sometimes elusive but serious conversations. Conversations are examined in interactions such as childrearing by Jo Yoon and in college reviews in school, and informal family conferences. The practical reality of human development emerges out of, and flows with, these conversations. An innovative sociology of life change, this book opens up a critical analysis — and sheds new light on the practical work of all those who deal with life change and human development.

Funding Opportunities

Public Policy Fellowships, beginning July 1, 1977 and continuing for at least one year, the American Enterprise Institute for Public Policy Research in Washington, DC, will offer a limited number of National Endowment for the Humanities fellowships for full-time research for a period of no less than six months and no longer than one year. Residence would be continuous in Washington, D.C.

Applications are now invited from interested scholars, with a deadline for receipt of April 15, 1977, addressed to Dr. Robert E. Puffer, American Enterprise Institute, 1150 17th Street, NW, Washington, DC 20036. Announcement of fellowship awards will be made within three months of the application deadline. As a non-profit, nonpartisan, research and educational institute, AEI is keenly interested in advancing public policy research to address public policy issues. To date, this work has been undertaken by persons associated with the Institute in the following areas: (1) peace studies which include regional conflict issues; (2) economic development and human values; (3) the relationship of public policy to political institutions and how certain institutions can either nurture or inhibit the generalization of specific human values; (4) the future of constitutional democratic political institutions; (5) technological innovation in relationship to the formulations of a national security policy that is consonant with America's historical heritage.

While the above areas are broad enough to include most concerns, applicants who are especially concerned with the frontiers between the humanities and public policy on other issues may also apply.

Support under the National Endowment for the Humanities fellowships at the American Enterprise Institute will be limited to study of research in the humanities and humanistic social sciences. These fellowships will not be awarded to degree candidates or for study leading to advanced degrees, but are limited to persons with doctorates or equivalent at both senior and junior levels in their careers. Foreign nationals may not be included unless they have been residents in the United States for at least three years immediately preceding the date of their award, with individual exceptions permitted only in rare cases. Fellows must devote full time to their study and may not simultaneously hold other major fellowships except sabbaticals or grants from their own institutions. The National Endowment for the Humanities fellowships at AEI will be awarded all benefits, services and accommodations normally accorded other fellows at the Institute.

Effort will be made to give support to both senior and junior scholars, though full implementation of the program for junior scholars will await on receipt of matching funds. Residence at AEI may begin as early as July 1, 1977.

Yale University-West Haven Veterans Administration Hospital Health Services Research Program. A limited number of postdoctoral fellowships are available for interdisciplinary research on the organization, management, and delivery of services at the West Haven VA Hospital. Candidates must have a doctorate degree in the health, behavioral, and/or administrative sciences.

Fellows have full access to the academic resources of Yale University and research support through the Hospital. Fellowships are available for a twelve-month period, but a second year of support is possible. Stipends are $18,120 per year. Deadline for application is March 15, 1977. Further information and application forms contact: Donald C. Riedel, PhD, Chair, Center for the Study of Health Services, Yale University, PO Box 728, New Haven, CT 06503 (203) 432-3822.

More About Funding in Aging. A 170-page guide to sources of funding in the field of aging has been published by AgedLife University Press. The Journal of Social Service Research has been designed to foster empirical research in the broad fields of social work and social welfare.

The Journal takes as its mission the publication and dissemination of empirical studies which contribute significantly to knowledge development. The Journal will include papers ranging from clinical research to empirical policy studies.

The primary concern is to publish papers that make a conceptual contribution to the field, and that are characterized by sophisticated and appropriate designs and rigorous data analysis.

The Journal of Social Service Research will be a source of fresh, scientific information in the social services field. Fellow researchers, social work educators, social & behavioral scientists, students, social policy analysts, social work practitioners, agency administrators, and various observers of the social welfare scene will find the Journal a vehicle of research-based examination of problems and theory related to the design, delivery, and management of social services. Each issue will be marked by a series, probing social, characteristic of works of science and scholarship.

The Journal will include studies from the international social service arena and contributions from social and behavioral scientists. The Editorial Review Board of the Journal of Social Service Research is comprised of distinguished practitioners whose work spans the entire spectrum of social work and social welfare. The Board welcomes manuscripts dealing with the variety of social services that are based on empirical data and its careful and creative analysis.

FEDERAL SUMMER JOBS FOR STUDENTS

Each year, federal agencies select a small number of undergraduate and graduate students to be sponsored by their colleges for employment in specially designed and well-paid intern positions. Federal summer interns receive practical experience in some phase of federal activity related to their individual career goals and salaries which range from $160 to $200 per week. About half of the summer intern positions are located in Washington, DC and half distributed throughout the rest of the country.

Most four-year colleges and universities are invited by federal agencies to nominate student candidates. Each participating school is limited to one or two nominations and is invited to submit a questionnaire for one specific position. Specific requirements for each internship are included with the invitations to colleges. There are minimum requirements for all positions: 12 credit hours must have been completed; 30 hours must be a graduate student; 12 credit hours must have been completed in the upper 30% of the class; and 30 students must be U.S. citizens.

Students interested in being considered for a summer internship should contact their college or university placement office immediately. Deadlines vary by federal agency and some will already have passed.

SOCCER: AN INTRODUCTION
BY REECE MCGEE AND OTHERS

Purdue University

Following two main themes, social organization and the personal usefulness of sociology—Reece McGee and twenty other sociologists, who consistently teach the introductory course, have written a new comprehensive introductory sociology program, consisting of three main texts: Student Study Guide, and Instructor's Manual.

Covering all the traditional areas of study, Sociology: An Introduction gives in-depth treatment to basic concepts, theoretical models, vocabulary, and classic studies.

Sociology: An Introduction. It has every component necessary to teach a complete course successfully.

FEATURES:
- Contains chapter-opening vignettes that both animate interest and immediately illustrate the student the relationship between sociological concepts and real life situations.
- Carefully selected and arranged with boxed materials, charts, graphs, cartoons, and photographs, which will enhance the students understanding and awareness of sociological concepts.
- Includes chapter outlines and summaries to assist students in organizing the material.
- Provides a new, proven pedagogical device, the "running glossary."
- Chapter Two (Scientific Method) in Sociological Research is a simply written, essentially non-quantitative introduction to methods which reviewers have acclaimed as one of the text's most outstanding features. The logical and research procedures are em- phasized rather than the computational aspects.
- A complete teaching-learning package—An Instructor's Manual with full guide—A 3 x 5 Card File Test Bank—A Study Guide containing chapter summaries, chapter outlines, key word checklists, self-tests, and suggestions for further study, term papers, and research projects.
