MESSAGE FROM THE EDITOR

This issue is brimming with information from the Simon-Gagnon and Levine fellowship award announcements on page 2 to calls for papers and other exciting news from our dynamic section members. Also, in addition to the usual schedule for our section-sponsored sessions at the upcoming ASA Annual Meeting, I have included other sessions of interest from across the discipline. It is wonderfully encouraging to see the range as well as the sheer quantity of work being done on sexualities!

On a somewhat bittersweet note, this is my last issue as editor so that I can turn my focus to finishing coursework and starting a dissertation proposal. This means we’ll be appointing a new editor at the business meeting, so be sure to volunteer if you are interested. Feel free to contact me in the meantime if you have any questions about the position. Thanks again for this wonderful opportunity. I have thoroughly enjoyed it! I look forward to seeing you all in San Francisco! ~ Teddy E. Kardash Sexualities: Identity, Behavior, and Society opens with classical and contemporary theories about sexualities, including selections by Freud, Kinsey, and Fausto-Sterling. Subsequent chapters explore the ways in which we learn about sexual activities and develop sexual identities, both heterosexual and same sex. The discussion expands to include sexual adaptations, sexual media, intersections with violence, and sex education. The text ends with a key question: How will the next generation be taught about sex?

With its synthesized focus on the psychological, social, ethical, and political discussions of sexualities, this book is ideal for courses in sociology, women’s studies, anthropology, family studies, communication, and social work.

Baby Steps: How Lesbian Alternative Insemination Is Changing the World
By Amy Agigian.

This book explores the controversial implications of lesbian insemination. Each year hundreds of children around the world are born to lesbian mothers who conceived through alternative insemination. This unique form of family-making creates families with no legal or psychological father, and challenges some of our most basic assumptions about what it means to be a family. How, and why, do lesbians use insemination to build their families? How could it best be protected by law? Is insemination the ultimate in lesbian liberation, or a sell-out to nuclear family norms? How are race, class, feminism, and human engineering involved? Drawing on legal findings and personal interviews, as well as medical and psychoanalytic research, sociologist Amy Agigian looks at the impact and potential of this form of reproduction.

Baby Steps is the first in-depth discussion of the issues and questions raised by lesbian insemination, and the book has been designed to serve the interests of general readers and health care providers as well as teachers and students in women’s studies, gay and lesbian studies, sociology, legal studies, and bioethics.

“Baby Steps is a fascinating study of the world of lesbian alternative insemination. Agigian has taken the unique step of critiquing the institutions and society in which lesbian families exist, rather than the families and conception methods themselves. In doing so, she brings into focus the institutional discrimination that has been perpetrated against lesbian families, particularly within the medical and legal systems, and justly argues that such reactions require radical revision. She tracks the politicization of lesbian alternative insemination from an invisible and largely autonomous practice to its commercialization and mainstreaming, which although medically safer, shifts the reproductive control and accessibility.”—Dr. Ruth McNair, Senior Lecturer, Department of General Practice, University of Melbourne

“Baby Steps presents a fascinating glance at our cultural and technological possibilities for a more gender-fluid and nurture-centered future.”—Robbie Davis-Floyd, author of Birth as an American Rite of Passage

“Patriarchy is a longstanding, durable institution and this book exhilarates any reader—heterosexual or lesbian—who is weary of living under its mantle.”—Robbie Pfeufer Kahn, Associate Professor of Sociology, University of Vermont and author of Bearing Meaning: The Language of Birth

Regulating Sex: The Politics of Intimacy and Identity Editors: Elizabeth Bernstein and Laurie Schaffner (Routledge: Fall 2004).

God, Sex and Politics: Homosexuality and Everyday Theologies. Dawne Moon (University of Chicago Press, 2004). God, Sex and Politics is an ethnographic study which draws from and contributes to theories in the sociology of religion and the sociology of sexuality, as it seeks to make sense of debates about homosexuality in two United Methodist congregations, one theologically liberal and the other conservative. In it, Moon seeks to discover what makes these debates so explosive, and finds that these debates threaten to expose incompatible beliefs about who or what God is and what God demands of people with regard to sexuality, sin, conflict and politics. She examines how emotion languages figure into these debates, allowing members to distance their concerns from what they consider “politics” while positing gay men and lesbians as “pained.”

Library Journal: While there have been plenty of books written about religion and gays, there is little ethnographic accounting of how particular religious communities grapple with the issues. Moon takes us to two Methodist congregations: one situated in a large urban environment, the other in a small town about 70 miles away. The congregations and the individuals in them are portrayed pseudonymously, but Moon imbues the debates and conflicts with vivid realism. The urban congregation was in the midst of self-examination about whether or not to join the "Reconciling Congregations Program," a movement with American Methodism to welcome sexual minorities explicitly. A substantial group of members of the other congregation were involved in another organization called "Transforming Congregations," which is more conservative in approach. Some of the core issues of Christianity are raised and contested: the nature of sin, the role of politics, and the relationship of Scripture and experience. The book shows how people put into effect their beliefs on a specific issue (in this case, homosexuality) when faced with the broader questions. Moon has an unusual ability to explain social science theory clearly and give a three-dimensional report on real people grappling with issues that are very important to them. Both general and academic readers will find much in this book to commend. -David Azzolina, Univ. of Pennsylvania Lib., Philadelphia Copyright 2004 Reed Business Information.

CALL FOR PAPERS
“New Social Movements and Sexuality.” The sixth meeting of the international seminar “Socialism and Sexuality” The sixth meeting in the series "Socialism and Sexuality" will be held on October 8-9, 2004 hosted by the Department of Philosophy, Sofia University, Bulgaria. It will focus on the sexual ideologies and programs of the new social movements in Western Europe, the United States, and after 1989 in Central and Eastern Europe.

Cultural changes in the 1970s and 1980s have led to a proliferation of new social movements in Europe and the United States concerning ecology, peace, ethnicity, gender and sexual identity. Although they are called “new social movements” some of them have existed since the late 19th century. Extension of participatory democracy has been one of the most notable features of these new social movements. Most of them have been closely allied with socialist parties, and share some of the goals of the traditional and the new left ideologies (with the exception of the right wing ecology movement). Sexuality and sexual reform occupied a significant place in the new social movements of the West. The demise of communism in 1989

UPCOMING AT ASA 2004

What are the challenges to achieving equity for women of color in the academy? What concrete measures can sociologists take to confront challenges that impede progress at the individual and institutional levels, within our ourselves, our departments, our universities and the discipline? Given the various ways that race and gender intersect with class and sexuality, what are the implications for achieving equity? This workshop will address these issues and begin to create strategies for gender, class, race and sexual equity on a wide variety of dimensions from effective mentoring, to hiring, tenure and promotion to senior ranks.

Background of Sister to Sister: The concept for Sister-to-Sister emerged from a dialogue between SWS/ABS in August 2002. In August 2003, Sister-to-Sister had its first meeting on the campus of Spelman’s College in Atlanta and began a conversation between white women and women of color about building relationships across race/ethnic lines within academy. Nearly one hundred women attended the luncheon at Spelman and our project was born. We continued in January 2004 at the SWS Winter Meetings where the steering committee met to engage in a discussion how race and ethnicity shape the experiences of junior and senior women faculty and to establish long term goals of the task force. The next step to continue to build sisterhood, SWS, ABS and a variety of ASA sections are sponsoring a gathering in August 2004.

August 2004 Sister-To-Sister Activities: To move to the next step in building sustainable relationships between women of color and white women, we are holding a workshop at 3:00 at the Westin St Francis Hotel, San Francisco, CA (ABS headquarters) on Friday August 13th. There will be a reception following the workshop at 4:30. We will begin with a panel discussion by several senior scholars who will discuss their personal experiences with race, ethnicity, and sexuality within the academy. After the opening panel, we will break into small work groups to actively discuss personal experiences and use those experiences to begin to strategize best practices to minimize and eventually eradicate discrimination within the academy. Each working group will wrestle with facing privilege of all sorts, from both the privileged and disadvantaged positions, and how to begin the process of dismantling such privileges. Topics that will be addressed include class, race, creating alliances, transitions from grad student to faculty, navigating the job market, transitions across faculty ranks, etc.

Please mark your calendars and be sure to arrive in San Francisco in time to join this important conversation. We have decided pre-registration is not required. Check the SWS and ABS websites for details. For more information, contact, Barbara Risman at Barbara_Risman@ncsu.edu or Patricia Warren at pywarren@sa.ncsu.edu.

triggered a new wave of social movements in Central and Eastern Europe and the former Soviet States. Unlike their predecessors in the West, the pro-democracy movements of CEE countries are essentially conservative and anti-socialist. One important cluster of the new social movements in Central and Eastern Europe that is clearly missing is the movement for sexual reform.

Despite promising legal changes and expansion of the freedoms for the individuals in all countries of the region, sexual relationships are considered only in the case of couple: adult, monogamous and heterosexual. Sexual reform, gay and lesbian and the transgender movements have usually been excluded from the public discourse on social tolerance and development of social capital.

About the “Socialism and Sexuality” Seminar: Created in 1997 by Francis Ronsin (University of Burgundy, Dijon) and other scholars associated with the Institute of Contemporary History (Dijon), the International Institute of Social History (Amsterdam), and the Center for Millennial Studies (Boston), the “Socialism and Sexuality seminar” has brought together on a yearly basis a number of scholars who explored the link between socialism and sexual politics. This year the seminar aims to attract more scientists from Central and Eastern Europe and the countries of the former Soviet Union, and expand the existing international network of scholars who research the sexual programs of leftist ideologies. (Read more about the last meeting of the series “Socialism and Sexuality” at: http://www.iisg.nl/~womhist/socandsex.html)

Registration: If you are interested to attend the conference, please submit paper abstracts by June 15, 2004 to Monika Pisankaneva (monika_68@hotmail.com). The organizers are currently searching for sponsors to cover the conference-related expenses of scholars who lack the means to attend.
