Land Acknowledgement and Recognition

Before we can talk about sociology, power, and inequality, we must acknowledge our presence on the traditional, ancestral, and unceded territory of the Gabrielino/Tongva peoples. The American Sociological Association (ASA), acknowledges that academic institutions, indeed the nation-state itself, were founded upon and continue to enact exclusions and erasures of Indigenous Peoples. This acknowledgement demonstrates a commitment to beginning the process of working to dismantle ongoing legacies of settler colonialism, and to recognize the hundreds of Indigenous Nations who continue to resist, live, and uphold their sacred relations across their lands. We also pay our respect to Indigenous elders past, present, and future and to those who have stewarded this land throughout the generations.

Cecilia Menjivar

ASA President

University of California-Los Angeles

Amid the challenges of the COVID-19 pandemic and the various manifestations of violence around us today, we need connection, community, and the power of sociological thinking to understand the world—and to change it. I am deeply honored to welcome you all to Los Angeles to engage in fruitful and invigorating conversations so that our collective sociological wisdom can sustain us, enlighten us, and help us see possibilities for a better and more just world. It is my sincerest hope that we can come together for meaningful exchanges while also enjoying the bounty that Los Angeles has to offer.

This year, ASA returns to Los Angeles for the first time in nearly three decades (the last time ASA was in L.A. was in 1994), which means that we, local sociologists, are thrilled to welcome you! So, I want to welcome you warmly to my hometown and invite you to explore its rich culture, sights, neighborhoods, and history. The local committee (Jody Agius-Vallejo and Jan Lin, co-chairs; Kevan Harris, Nadia Kim, Alejandra Marchevsky, James McKeever, and Walter Nicholls) has been hard at work curating tours and lists of restaurants, neighborhoods, and places of interest. They also have organized regional spotlight panels that showcase L.A. for sociologists, including a look back at the thirty years after the L.A. rebellion of 1992, Indigenous Los Angeles, gentrification and displacement, the role of community colleges in L.A., the immigrant rights movement, and the politics and policies that affect the unhoused.

The theme I chose for the 2022 meetings, Bureaucracies of Displacement, allows us to examine the depth and breadth of the effects of political and policy decisions on the wide range of challenges and crises that we face in the United States and around the world today. I convened a program committee (Nina Bandelj, Nancy López, Paul Almeida, Monica Bell, Cedric de Leon, Cynthia Feliciano, Nilda Flores-Gonzalez, Neda Maghbouleh, Rashawn Ray, Florencia Torche, Chris Uggen, and Laurel Westbrook) to help me organize a meeting that would create a solid platform to discuss such challenges, aiming to be as inclusive as possible of different themes, populations, and spaces.

I am delighted to open the meetings with the plenary, Beyond Control: Immigration Policy in an Era of Enforcement, where Muzaffar Chishti (Migration Policy Institute/NYU Law), Kelly Lytle Hernandez (UCLA), Douglas Massey (Princeton), Karen Musalo (Center for Gender and Refugee Studies, Hastings College of Law), and Roger Waldinger (UCLA) will discuss pressing questions in immigration policy. Immediately following, I invite you all to the welcoming reception, with a musical performance by the Jornaleros del Norte, a band composed of immigrant laborers living in Los Angeles.

Two other plenaries include a conversation about Abortion Rights in Crisis: Reflections on Dobbs v Jackson, led by Carole Joffe (UCSF), on the SCOTUS decision and its implications with participation from Michele Goodwin (UC Irvine Law), Michelle Oberman (Santa Clara University), Bhavik Kumar (Planned Parenthood, Texas), and Patricia Zavella (UC Santa Cruz). And a plenary on Decentering Sociology from the Global North, with Peggy Levitt (Wellesley College) moderating a discussion on how to center knowledge from the Global South to understand our world, with panelists Nazli Kibria (Boston University), Marco Garrido (UChicago), Victor Agadjanian (UCLA), and Paul Almeida (UC Merced).

Presidential Panels on guns in society, climate change, voter suppression, race representation in Hollywood, vaccine refusal, housing insecurity, threats to end abortion and LGBTQ+ rights around the world, family separation, mass incarceration, gender-based violence, anti-Asian racism, immigration enforcement (and more), section sessions, book panels, and regular sessions will ensure meaningful conversations, so we go home inspired, with our sociological imaginations sharpened. But while in L.A., please enjoy our city and have fun at the various events, visiting with old friends and meeting new ones!

Luis Flores, Jr. is a PhD candidate in sociology and an affiliate at the Stone Center for Inequality Dynamics at the University of Michigan. He earned his BA in political economy and history from the University of California, Berkeley. Flores studies how the shifting regulatory boundaries separating home and market shape labor, wealth, and inequality.

Edwin Grimsley is a PhD candidate in sociology at the City University of New York (CUNY), The Graduate Center. He earned his BA in biology from Wesleyan University. Broadly, Grimsley studies the intersection of race and racism, economic inequality, urban sociology, and criminology.

Theresa Hice-Fromille is a PhD candidate in sociology at the University of California, Santa Cruz. She graduated from Lock Haven University in 2016 with a BA in political science and Spanish. Hice-Fromille's dissertation research focuses on the processes of teaching, learning, and imagining among Black women and girls at two community-based educational organizations.

Carla Salazar Gonzalez is a PhD candidate in sociology at the University of California, Los Angeles. She earned her MA in social sciences and BA in sociology from the University of California, Irvine. Gonzalez's research explores the consequences of immigration border policies and laws on immigrant populations and their families within and outside of the U.S.

Korey Tillman is a PhD Candidate in the sociology department at the University of New Mexico. He earned his MA in sociology from University of Nevada, Las Vegas, and his BS in computer science from Syracuse University. Tillman's research traces a human-Black racial hierarchy that informs modernity and examines how in moments when Blackness is policed, this racial hierarchy is reified and challenged.

ASA Minority Fellowship Program (MFP)

ASA's Minority Fellowship Program was founded in 1974. To date, the program has supported more than 460 students of color in pursuit of a doctoral degree in sociology. Areas of interest for Fellows include social psychology, gender and sexuality, education, medicine and health, inequalities and stratification, race and ethnicity, and more. MFP seeks to attract talented doctoral students to ensure that a diverse and highly trained workforce is available to assume leadership roles in the discipline and conduct research that is relevant to today's global society.

Since #OscarsSoWhite, Hollywood has undergone a racial reckoning. Significantly, sociologists have been at the forefront of research and advocacy work on behalf of BIPOC in Hollywood both in front and behind the camera. They will gather in the city of Los Angeles for a special "one-night only" appearance. On stage will be the authors of the UCLA Hollywood Diversity Report: Dr. Darnell Hunt and Dr. Ana-Christina Ramon, who will talk about their latest research on representation in film and television. Joining them are Maryann Erigha, the author of The Hollywood Jim Crow: The Racial Politics of the Movie Industry. Special guests include Clyde Kusatsu, veteran actor and National Vice President of SAG-AFTRA Los Angeles Local, and Yvonne Villarreal, TV staff writer for the Los Angeles Times. The moderator for the session is Nancy Wang Yuen, the author of Reel Inequality: Hollywood Actors and Racism. Join this expert panel for a lively discussion of race and racism in the entertainment industry.

Panelists: Robert Santos, U.S. Census; Jenifer L. Bratter, Rice University; Lydia Camarillo, Southwest Voter Registration and Education Project; Carolyn A. Liebler, University of Minnesota-Twin Cities; Neda Maghbouleh, University of Toronto

The U.S. Census is a long-standing bureaucracy originally developed to count the nation's population for the purpose of apportioning congressional seats in the House of Representatives with the count also used to distribute federal funds. Since its inception, the Census has been a bureaucracy of exclusion. Historically, slaves accounted for three-fifth of a person and even today marginalized groups are disproportionately undercounted. As people of color now become a larger segment of the nation's population, there have been heightened efforts to disempower and exclude people of color and other marginalized groups. The panel will be part of a conversation addressing issues related to the current situation and the changes that need to take place to ensure equitable apportionment, redistricting, and resource allocations as we plan for the 2030 census.

Sociologists are sometimes concerned with how our ideas appear, or fail to appear, in media coverage of critical issues and events. This panel brings together three prominent journalists who draw on and advance sociological thinking in their respective beats. Jamelle Bouie is an opinion columnist at the New York Times and political analyst for

CBS News. Known for bringing historical and sociological context to current events, Bouie was chief political correspondent for Slate magazine before joining NYT in 2019. Jerusalem Demsas is a policy reporter at Vox and

This panel will consist of a discussion and Q&A session on immigration enforcement, borders, and displacement with migration scholars working in critical field sites in Mexico, along the US-Mexico border, and in the interior United States. The panelists will provide a brief overview of their current research projects and will discuss the dynamic and changing nature of Central American and Mexican migration in these field sites. The participants will touch on a variety of topics such as asylum, undocumented migration, migrants' experiences with Mexican and US officials, Title 42 "expulsions," migrant deaths, and immigration enforcement in the interior United States. Attention will also be paid to, on the one hand, the various forms of marginalization and vulnerability migrants experience, and on the other, the agency and resiliency they exercise during their migratory trajectories.

President: Min Zhou, University of California-Los Angeles

Panelists: Russell M. Jeung, San Francisco State University; Vivian Shaw, Vanderbilt University; Nazreen Sameena Bacchus, SUNY-Farmingdale; Elena Shih, Brown University

This panel aims to shed light on the understanding of the roots and impacts of structural racism and discrimination against Asian Americans and other people of color during and after Covid-19. Panelists will share their empirical research findings on anti-Asian racism and discuss implications and directions moving forward in combating racism. Using incidents reported to Stop AAPI Hate, Dr. Russell Jeung will discuss the nationwide trends in anti-Asian racism, their causes, and their historic roots. He then shares how the Asian American community is resisting this racism and what gains we have made. Dr. Vivian Shaw will draw from recent interview and survey data to consider the implications of anti-Asian racism on Asian American experiences of work during the pandemic, specifically focusing on how this population has navigated competing needs related to physical, health, and financial risks. She will also discuss the challenges of studying a diverse demographic as a collective of junior scholars during a long-term disaster. Dr. Nazreen S. Bacchus will discuss the intersections of Islamophobia and anti-Asian discrimination during COVID and post-COVID era. She also plans to include the ways in which Asian American Muslim communities have been organizing against discrimination during this time. Dr. Elena Shih will connect current incidents of anti-Asian hate within larger nodes of state sanctioned violence examining Asian America and the state violence of white supremacy through the case of migrant massage work in North America.

Discussant: Myra Marx Ferree, University of Wisconsin - Madison
Gender-based violence creates "displacements:" isolation from social networks, loss of access to paid work and welfare benefits, psychological upheaval, forced migration, lost faith in trusted institutions, housing insecurity, and coercive legal system involvement. Due to action or inaction, states variously create, interrupt, and/or reproduce such displacements. States also help produce and transform gender orders, making them important and contested sites of political claims-making around gender-based violence. Sociologists have long shown that we cannot ignore these "public" questions about states when we investigate "private" experiences of violence. Such questions are urgent during the pandemic and lockdown periods, wherein immiserating structural forces may intersect with increased opportunities for intimate abuse. The study of welfare and penal states, bureaucratic procedures, and survivors' interactions with state categories of recognition (or misrecognition) is therefore essential to theorizing gender-based violence. What role should states play in responding to intimate violence? Whose visions of "protection" are amplified in state policy? What kind of state exists for non-normative victims? How do state categories - such as "victim" or "refugee" - shape our understandings of violence and of survival? This panel will explore these questions across national contexts, insisting on a diverse and comparative approach that interrogates the relationship between state power, everyday bureaucratic practices, and gender-based harm.

Panelists: Nazli Kibria, Boston University; Victor Agadjanian, University of California-Los Angeles; Marco Z. Garrido, University of Chicago; Paul D. Almeida, University of California-Merced

Across the world, calls for greater equity in the halls of academia are loud and clear. They demand more diversity and inclusion, or that the university should be globalized or decolonized. Why, then, if everyone agrees that business as usual is no longer acceptable—and that a wider range of voices needs to be heard—is change so slow? Responses to inequality in the academy center on including a wider variety of theory and epistemology, but they do not go far enough. The panelists in this session will discuss how they decenter Global North sociology by working with theories, research methods, collaborators, co-authors, publishing outlets, attitudes, and pedagogies from regions across the Global South. How can we do more of this now and what do we need to do differently in the future? What kinds of ethical, ideological, and attitudinal changes would it take to create a truly decentered academic world? How should the next generation of graduate students be trained to engage more actively and successfully beyond our borders?

Panelists: Debora Diniz, University of Brasilia; Pauline Cullen, Maynooth University; SM Rodriguez, London School of Economics; Jocelyn S. Viterna, Harvard University; Fanny Gomez-Lugo, Georgetown Law School, Women's Equality Center

Recent changes in the composition of the U.S. Supreme Court raise questions about whether existing gender-based rights (like abortion access and LGBTQI+ protections) will be overturned. Yet this narrow focus on judicial decisions tends to ignore the broader so-called "pro-family" movement—the movement responsible for mounting these judicial challenges in the first place. Who are the organizations and activists mobilizing successfully against abortion and LGBTQI+ rights? How do they share resources, information, and tactics transnationally? Whose bodies are targeted with their policies and propaganda? And who benefits—economically, politically, and socially—from their legislative and judicial victories? This panel brings together experts on gender-based rights from four key cases—Ireland, Brazil, Uganda and El Salvador—offering a novel opportunity to understand how right-wing political parties and organizations around the globe are successfully transforming laws and institutions to protect the heteronormative order, and in the process, securing their own positions of political power. The panel concludes with a discussant who will review the current situation in the US, and reflect on its similarities and differences with the other cases.

This session takes stock of current and future directions for the sociology of housing insecurity, with special attention to the programs, policies, and partnerships that manage residents experiencing housing insecurity. While much of the research on housing instability focuses on eviction, households face multiple forms of acute and chronic housing insecurity.

This session pulls together sociologists studying eviction, homelessness, low-income housing assistance, landlord-tenant relations, and displacement. The session will highlight the intersections between the lived experience of housing insecurity and the urban configurations, regulatory processes, local and federal policies, and organizational practices that structure housing insecurity.
