Land Acknowledgement and Recognition

Before we can talk about sociology, power, and inequality, we must acknowledge our presence on the traditional, ancestral, and unceded territory of the Lenapehoking, both diasporic and descendant of Lenape communities. The American Sociological Association (ASA), acknowledges that academic institutions, indeed the nation-state itself, was founded upon and continues to enact exclusions and erasures of Indigenous Peoples. This acknowledgement demonstrates a commitment to beginning the process of working to dismantle ongoing legacies of settler colonialism, and to recognize the hundreds of Indigenous Nations who continue to resist, live, and uphold their sacred relations across their lands. We also pay our respect to Indigenous elders past, present, and future and to those who have stewarded this land throughout the generations.

Prudence L. CarterASA PresidentBrown University*

Greetings! I am delighted to welcome you to the 118th Annual Meeting of the American Sociological Association (ASA) in Philadelphia, the cradle city of U.S. democracy. Our theme this year is “The Educative Power of Sociology,” which I chose for multiple reasons. First, it highlights the power of education as a major social institution and landscape; and second, it draws our attention to the utility of educative processes that sustain and enhance our discipline—whose very existence deepens understanding about society on many levels.

In today’s era of economic, social, and political divisions, sociology has a unique role to play in shaping policies and practices that address society’s complex problems. I treasure how our discipline has made significant contributions to research, teaching, and practice about the economic, political, cultural, and social realities of our world. I want to love it more for its future contributions to the expansion of theories, concepts, policies, and practices that would help to ameliorate the numerous social problems that communities around the globe face.

As in prior years, our August meeting is replete with rich offerings. It will bring together scholars from diverse fields and countries to discuss, debate, and collaborate. I believe that social science comprises an interdependent ecology of knowledge generation and shaping of policy and practice. Tackling complex and challenging issues requires diverse solutions that come from many different angles. That’s why I’m thrilled to kick off our Annual Meeting with a lively conversation among some of the brightest minds, including special guests from sociology, anthropology, economics, education, law, political science, and beyond. By bringing together such a diverse group of experts, we can start exploring new ideas and approaches that might just help us make some progress on these thorny issues. In another plenary, we will hear from sociologists who span professional boundaries moving back and forth among academic, policy, and public service.

What an extraordinary year I’ve had working alongside colleagues to plan our Annual Meeting. Kudos and deep gratitude to this year’s Program Committee members, including Andy Andrews (University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill); Bailey Brown (Spelman College); Cynthia Feliciano (Washington University); Neda Maghbouleh (University of Toronto); Roslyn Mickelson (University of North Carolina, Charlotte); Vice-President Mignon Moore (Barnard), Ellis Monk (Harvard), Dina Okamoto (Indiana, Bloomington); Rebecca Romo (Santa Monica College); and David Takeuchi (University of Washington)! Also, I appreciate the strong guidance and support of ASA Meeting Services Director Michelle Randall; Executive Director Nancy Kidd; and the many other wonderful staff at ASA.

We couldn’t have done it without the help of generous colleagues and volunteers, so a big thank you to all of you who planned sessions, as well. We have put our hearts and minds into planning hundreds of plenaries, panels, workshops, and receptions to make sure that you have an enriching experience. We hope that you will be deeply stimulated by your interactions and discussions, as we work together to deepen the educative power of our discipline.

Please enjoy the conference and take some time to explore the historic “City of Brotherly Love” while you are here!

Clark Brinson is a PhD candidate in sociology and part of the Coalition of Graduate Sociologists and the Black Graduate Student Association at Emory University. She earned her BA in Psychology at The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. Brinson examines family formation desires among Black queer-identified women.

Faith Deckard is a PhD candidate in sociology and a Population Research Fellow at the University of Texas at Austin. She earned her BA in Biology at Trinity University. Her dissertation examines how friends and family inadvertently become involved in carceral surveillance and the punishment system through the processes of bail and bail bonds.

Quintin Gorman Jr. is a PhD candidate in sociology and a Research Assistant for the Race and Racial Experience workgroup at Rice University. He received his BA at McMurry University in sociology and political science and served 18 years in the U.S. Airforce. His dissertation utilizes multi-item scales to measure double consciousness and to evaluate Du Boisian theory.

Jonathan Ibarra is a PhD candidate in sociology at the University of California, Santa Barbara, where he also earned his BA and MA. His interest areas include inequality, Latinx sociology, and culture. His dissertation uses ethnography to examine the school experiences of working-class Mexican American and Latinx students and how they navigate school discipline and non-disciplinary support networks.

Demetrius Miles Murphy is a PhD candidate in sociology at the University of Southern California, Los Angeles. He earned his BBA in Management Consulting and Africana Studies at the University of Notre Dame and his MA in Latin American Studies at Vanderbilt University. His dissertation examines how Black people across classes create and experience flourishing.

DeAnna Smith is a PhD candidate in sociology at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor. She earned her BA in sociology at Northwestern University, and her MA in sociology at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor. Her dissertation pairs interviews with participant observations to investigate how formerly incarcerated women and their families traverse the evolving landscape of punishment after incarceration.

ASA Minority Fellowship Program (MFP)

ASA's Minority Fellowship Program was founded in 1974. To date, the program has supported more than 460 students of color in pursuit of a doctoral degree in sociology. Areas of interest for Fellows include social psychology, gender and sexuality, education, medicine and health, inequalities and stratification, race and ethnicity, and more. MFP seeks to attract talented doctoral students to ensure that a diverse and highly trained workforce is available to assume leadership roles in the discipline and conduct research that is relevant to today's global society.

This presidential session engages elected leaders of multiple social science societies—current and past—in the Americas. One of the goals of the 2023 ASA meeting theme is to imagine the collective, educative power of the social sciences, especially as global society grapples with deep-seated challenges that require contributions of scholarship and research from multiple perspectives, approaches, and disciplines. Panelists will discuss how scholars, researchers, and practitioners in our respective disciplines can engage more intentionally across disciplinary, epistemological, and methodological boundaries to address broad issues facing society.

Critical quantitative and computational inquiry is a movement that now has established research centers and coursework within many research-intensive universities, funding mechanisms within grantmaking agencies and foundations, and communities of practice that span disciplines and fields. With the expansion of critical quantitative and computational methods (CritQCM) as context, this session will consider where the movement is in defining critical QCM, its complementarities and presumed incompatibilities with scientific rigor in research, and how sociologists may leverage a critical QCM to help achieve emancipatory educational systems for historically marginalized communities.

Panelists: Cynthia Coburn, Northwestern University; Nikki Jones, University of California-Berkeley; Daniel (Max) Crowley; Ruth N. Lopez Turley, Rice University

In the theme statement for the 2023 meeting, ASA President Prudence Carter asks, “How can sociologists expand further how they address and engage at the intersections of research, policy, and practice?” The William T. Grant Foundation has a long history of investing in research that can inform policy and practice to improve the lives of young people, and our grantees have learned important lessons about how research evidence can be more useful – and thus, more likely to be used – by policy makers and practitioners. In this session, panelists address: 1) the conditions under which research is more likely to be used in policy and practice, 2) what makes research more useful in the “real world,” 3) power, politics, and equity in research use, and 4) how we can know whether research is useful and used. Social scientists can play a critical role in addressing societal challenges – beyond describing and explaining these challenges, they can generate rigorous research evidence to develop solutions to them. This session will challenge sociologists to take the next step to advancing the educative power of sociology.

Presider: Mary E. Pattillo, Northwestern University

Panelists: Michael C. Dawson, University Chicago; Corey D. Fields, Georgetown University; Marc Lamont Hill, Temple University; Keeanga Yamahtta Taylor, Princeton University; Andrea S. Boyles, Tulane University

The concept of modern “political thought” is incomplete without an in-depth consideration of African American political thought. In the mid- to late twentieth century, social scientists conceptualized and offered empirical insights into the differentiated nature of black political thought, based on the existence of myriad civil rights movements and cultural events throughout prior history. Over two decades ago, political scientist Michael Dawson wrote one of the most comprehensive analyses of the complex relationships between black political thought and black political identity and behavior. This session not only revisits some of that analysis but also brings together a contemporaneous group of scholars and thought leaders with collective expertise on the spectrum of black political thought and identity and how they speak to the sociological imagination in the current social, economic, and political moments.

One of the most important educative functions of sociology is to engage with and inform public policy decisions at all levels of government. The goals of such engagement are to enhance social goods such as equity, opportunity, trust, and social cohesion, among others, working in partnership with policy leaders to produce virtuous cycles of social learning. Despite the vital importance of this process, and the potential upside for increased social good, existing links between the discipline and local, state, federal, Tribal and territorial governments remain tentative and inchoate for a variety of reasons. In this plenary session, sociologists who currently or previously have served in the federal government will take up three, central questions. First, what drives the call to public service sociology in this contemporary moment? Second, what does it take to answer the call, i.e., how can we do so? What can be learned from past efforts, both effective and not? How can we make and learn from new mistakes? Third, what does successful public service sociology look like in practice, harnessing the unique attributes and strengths of our field to help address dense, interwoven challenges of our contemporary society?

Sunday, 2:00 pm*40803. Presidential Panel. Sociological Thought and the Transformative Vision of Paulo Freire*Pennsylvania Convention Center, 200 Level, Ballroom A/B, 2:00-3:30pm

Session Organizer: Derron Wallace, Brandeis University

Presider: Prudence L. Carter, Brown University

Panelists: Michael Burawoy, University of California-Berkeley;

Patricia Hill Collins, University of Maryland - College Park; Crain Soudien, University of Cape Town

Paulo Freire was one of the leading visionary thinkers of the 20th century whose scholarship focused on power and oppression. Most known for his classic text, Pedagogy of the Oppressed, Freire became a global influence on social scientists and educational researchers across the world. Unlike some European thinkers, the Brazilian thinker Freire has been less revered and read in U.S. based-sociology. The educative power of Freire work persists, nevertheless, and this panel comprises some of sociology's leading theorists who have engaged with Freirian ideas to address if, why and how he should be read and studied in US sociology.

Pennsylvania Convention Center, 200 Level, Ballroom A/B, 4:00-5:30pm

Session Organizer: Jennifer C. Mueller, Skidmore College

Presenter: Jennifer C. Mueller, Skidmore College

Panelists: Kim Ebert, North Carolina State University; Amanda Evelyn Lewis, University of Illinois-Chicago; Mike Likier, Racial Justice Consulting; Biko Mandela Gray, Syracuse University

Discussant: Christopher Scott Chambers, Providence College
White Americans have responded to calls for racial justice in myriad, emotionally embodied ways. On the one side, white resistance includes not just ferocious rejection and staunch defense of privilege, but also an apathetic indifference that is arguably even more widespread. On the other, some white people are embracing the call to personal transformation and collective action targeting racist structures and institutions. What shapes white people's racialized responses to demands for racial justice, such as those arising from the Movement for Black Lives? Why do some white people become invested in fighting against critical race theory, while the majority remain practically indifferent? Finally, what compels some white people to 'show up for racial justice,' in mind, body and spirit? This panel speaks to these questions.
