Message From the Chair

Deana Rohlinger
Professor
Department of Sociology
Florida State University

Because of our excellent CBSM membership we had a productive and intellectually stimulating year! We hosted several informal Ask A Social Movement Scholar Anything sessions, launched a zoom featuring the recently published books of some of our younger scholars, used ASA Connect to start new working groups, added a new feature to Critical Mass that featured undergraduate writing, and found more effective ways to advertise members' publications on social media. We have a slate of exciting sessions lined up at ASA, a record-number tables in our roundtable session, and will have our first CBSM Workshop in several years. None of this would have been possible without CBSM council, Jennifer Brown (our secretary and treasurer), and all our committee members as well as our dedicated volunteers. I want to give a shout out to Pam Oliver, who surveyed our membership and helped launch our working groups, and give a big THANK YOU to Kelsy Kretschmer (chair), Ruth Braunstein, Jeff Sheng, and Aisha Upton for all their work organizing the workshop. I would also like to recognize the now defunct Institute of Politics at Florida State University. The Institute provided the section with $3,000, which made it possible for us to keep registration costs low particularly for graduate students.

I'm really looking forward to seeing old friends and making new ones in Philadelphia. I extend a special invitation to my younger colleagues to reach out to me before or after the meeting, if they want to talk movements or just say hi. I hope to see you at our reception on (continued on page 2)

Candidate Statement

I am a PhD candidate at UC Merced specializing in social movements, with a focus on veganism as a lifestyle movement. My research explores the recruitment, persistence, and disengagement phases of veganism, analyzing social ties, media influences, identity, and activist strategies at the micro level. I also have knowledge and background in environmental sociology, gender, sexuality, and interests in the sociology of culture and food.

Within the academy, I am primarily focused on teaching as I have completed three teaching pedagogy courses and participated in workshops on teaching pedagogy, including topics such as anti-racist pedagogy, critical thinking, community of practice, and online teaching. I have developed the skills to create inclusive learning environments and have taught my own course on Gender and Society

Alessandro Giuseppe Drago

McGill University

Candidate Statement

I am a Ph.D. candidate who studies far-right social and political movements. My dissertation project focuses on the white supremacist movement in the United States and Canada using a mixed methodology of both inductive qualitative coding and computational text analysis (namely, sentiment and network analysis). I am primarily interested in explaining how and why individuals come to join and participate in far-right organizations.

My other projects look at how far right political parties and candidates have used populism to hinder democratic rights and erode their countries' democratic foundations. My post-doctoral work will look at the intersections between far-right communities online, the role of disinformation networks and their spillover effects into the "real" world, meaning actions such as the January 6th insurrection, the 2022 Freedom Convoy protests, and more.

Candidate Statement

I am a Ph.D. candidate in Sociology & Peace Studies at the University of Notre Dame. I hold an M.A. in Sociology from Notre Dame and B.A. degrees in Sociology and Political Science & International Relations from Bogazici University (Turkey). My research primarily centers on political, cultural, and organizational factors influencing social movement mobilization and outcomes under authoritarian repression and uncertainty. Previously, I investigated how protests impact the implementation of housing and disaster preparation policies in authoritarian regimes, focusing on urban transformation projects affecting marginalized communities in Turkey.

Currently, I examine how intergenerational and contemporary influences on young activists shape their strategic and moral evaluations of risk-taking in anti authoritarian struggle through a recent student movement in Turkey. Additionally, I explore patterns of power and representation in knowledge production, both in multi-sectoral transnational fields and in academia itself. As part of this agenda, I have studied inequality in academic publication structures, and the role of political interest in creating and disseminating future narratives of sociopolitical change. My ongoing work includes an examination of how classical sociological theory classes impact

Elle Rochford, PhD

University of Delaware

Candidate Statement

I am a sociologist currently working as a postdoctoral researcher with the University of Delaware's Center for the Study and Prevention of Gender-Based Violence. I earned my PhD at Purdue University. My dissertation work examines racial inequalities within social movements related to reproductive health using social media data. I have published on digital sociology, gender, social movements, and reproductive health. At Purdue, I taught eight unique courses and received the University's highest teaching award for a graduate instructor. In addition to my academic publications, I engage in public sociology through podcasting and blogging. I host two social science podcasts: Proofing and Lies, a science literacy, current events, and baking podcast, and Measuring Violence, a podcast on violence and violence prevention research and practices.

Jessica L. Schachle

Oklahoma State University

Candidate Statement

I am a Ph.D. candidate in sociology at Oklahoma State University, where I am expecting to graduate in spring 2024. I obtained a Master of Arts from Wichita State University where my quantitative thesis explored how the intersection of gender, race, and participation in extracurricular activities impacted student academic success among high school girls.

My research focuses on education, social movements, race and ethnicity, and gender and sexuality. Currently, my research projects (1) examine student activism at U.S. colleges and universities, and (2) explore the multidimensionality of K-12 teacher activism in Oklahoma. My research on teacher activism has been recognized and awarded by the Women's Faculty Council at Oklahoma State University. My qualitative dissertation expands on prior conceptualizations of occupational activism by developing a typology that examines how K-12 Oklahoma teachers navigate instruction on race, gender, and sexuality in the wake of harmful and suppressive legislation.

My research has been published in outlets such as Work and Occupations, Sociological Forum, Sociological Focus, Sociology of Race and Ethnicity, and Social Sciences.

Andrew K. Thompson, PhD

College of the Holy Cross

Candidate Statement

Currently a Visiting Professor in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology at the College of the Holy Cross, I am looking to find a permanent home in a department where critical scholarship and social engagement are valued. My research examines how movements operate as sites of racial and cultural contestation. I approach my scholarship and teaching in a way that foregrounds my commitment to revolutionary social change.

I am the author of two books and the co-editor of three others. My work has been published in Social Movement Studies, Contention, and Interface, as well as in journals like Lateral: Journal of the Cultural Studies Association. I have also appeared in popular venues like Boston Review and the Los Angeles Review of Books.

My current research focuses on the decline of the social movement as the dominant mode of popular contention in the United States. Between the dissolution of democratic norms and the corresponding resurgence of violence, I hypothesize that we are entering an important period of transition. In this moment, the historical-tactical lessons of Black freedom struggles will become increasingly salient, since participants in these struggles have never been able to presuppose that the state would recognize them as legitimate claimants.

Chie Togami

University of Pittsburgh

Candidate Statement

Broadly speaking, my research spans environmental sociology, social movements, and gender. My dissertation addresses the organizational dynamics of new climate change movements and the impact of funding sources on movements’ strategic decision-making. Specifically, I interrogate the role and impact of philanthropy, asking: what are the implications of climate movements relying on funding from philanthropic foundations? In addition to my dissertation project, I have researched and written about air quality, environmental justice, and epistemology in Western Pennsylvania. In 2021, I produced a limited series podcast about the social and environmental legacy of the U.S. Steel Corporation.

More recently, I have collaborated on a project examining the global environmental justice impacts of the Biden-Harris lead service line replacement initiative. At ASA, I will present a co-authored manuscript, “Environmental Justice Victory? Waste Colonialism and the Afterlife of Lead Water Pipes.” My work on gender explores the intersection of gender and environmental social movements. In 2021, I co-authored a chapter “Women and Environmental Movements” for the Routledge Handbook of Environmental Social Movements. Presently, I am co-authoring an article that uses the example of climate activism to argue for the merits of thinking about gender and multiple masculinities as constituted by constellations of accountable situated practice.

Stephen Wulff

University of Minnesota-Twin Cities

Candidate Statement

I am a PhD candidate in sociology at University of Minnesota with research interests in policing, punishment, law and society, and social movements. My dissertation, Police Misconduct, Monetary Sanctions, and Insurance Models in the Modern Police Accountability Era, employs Armstrong and Bernstein’s (2008) multi-institutional politics approach to social movements to examine the role of insurance in regulating police behavior.

My first sole-authored article, recently published in Law & Social Inquiry (the official journal of the American Bar Foundation), analyzes the innovative but ultimately unsuccessful 2016 ballot campaign of the Committee for Professional Policing (CfPP), a police accountability group in Minneapolis, Minnesota, which attempted to make Minneapolis the first city nationwide to require police to carry professional liability insurance. I argue that CfPP's campaign can be situated within a wider fiscal justice movement that has emerged in the Black Lives Matter and modern police accountability era and has been spearheaded by activists and grassroots-focused research organizations seeking to hold police accountable along with the municipalities and financial institutions that financially immunize them. Currently, I am co-authoring a report examining all the financial costs stemming from George Floyd's murder.

My teaching interests include social movements, sociological theory, the criminal legal system, and ethnography.

Recent Publications

Abrams, Benjamin. 2023. The Rise of the Masses: Spontaneous Mobilization and Contentious Politics. University of Chicago Press.

Book Description (from publisher):

Between 15 and 26 million Americans participated in protests surrounding the murders of George Floyd, Ahmaud Arbery, Breonna Taylor, and others as part of the Black Lives Matter protests in 2020, which is only one of the most recent examples of an immense mobilization of citizens around a cause. In The Rise of the Masses, sociologist Benjamin Abrams addresses why and how people spontaneously protest, riot, and revolt en masse. While most uprisings of such a scale require tremendous resources and organizing, this book focuses on cases where people with no connection to organized movements take to the streets, largely of their own accord. Looking to the Arab Spring, Occupy Wall Street, and the Black Lives Uprising, as well as the historical case of the French Revolution, Abrams lays out a theory of how and why massive mobilizations arise without the large-scale planning that usually goes into staging protests.

Analyzing a breadth of historical and regional cases that provide insight into mass collective behavior, Abrams draws on first-person interviews and archival sources to argue that people organically mobilize when a movement speaks to their pre-existing dispositions and when structural and social conditions make it easier to get involved—what Abrams terms affinity-convergence theory. Shedding a light on the drivers behind large spontaneous protests, The Rise of the Masses offers a significant theory that could help predict movements to come.
